HISTORICAL

The CENTURY was founded, and its first Constitution adopted, January 13, 1847. One hundred gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters and the Fine Arts had been invited to join in forming the Association, of which number forty-two accepted the invitation and became Founders. Forty-six others joined during the year.

The name, suggested by the number originally invited to be members, was the proposal of Edgar S. Van Winkle.

On March 7, 1857, it was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, which was amended March 29, 1883.

From the spring of 1847 to the spring of 1849 it occupied rooms at No. 495 Broadway.

From the spring of 1849 to the spring of 1850 it occupied rooms at No. 435 Broome Street.

From the spring of 1850 to May, 1852, it occupied rooms at No. 575 Broadway.

From May, 1852, to the spring of 1857, it occupied the house at No. 24 Clinton Place (now No. 46 East 8th Street).

From the spring of 1857 to January 5, 1891, it occupied the house at No. 109 (old No. 42) East Fifteenth Street.

On January 10, 1891 it removed to its present club-house, No. 7 West Forty-third Street.

Successive amendments to the Constitution fixed the limit of resident membership as follows: March 5, 1853, 200 members; March 7, 1857, 250; May 7, 1859, 350; February 1, 1862, 400; April 7, 1866, 500; February 6, 1875, 600; December 5, 1885, 700; May 3, 1890, 800; February 6, 1892, 1000. The limit of non-resident membership has been fixed as follows: February 6, 1892, 300; December 3, 1921, 400; January 14, 1928, 500; June 3, 1941, 600; March 1, 1945, 700; April 3, 1958, 800.

On May 4, 1901, John Bigelow and Parke Godwin, only surviving members of The Column, a literary society founded in 1825, presented to The Century the privileges of fellow-membership with them. The silver memorial column bears a lamp which since 1858 had burned at every meeting of The Column and is now lighted at each gathering of The Century.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

THE Board of Management submits the following report for the year 1957:

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON ART

THE Exhibitions of the year were as follows:

January 9–April 5: Sculpture and Drawings by Paul Manship

May 1–July 31: Memorial Exhibition of Sculpture by Cecil Howard

August 14–September 22: Architectural Renderings of Classical New York

October 2–October 24: Autumn Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members

November 6–November 10: Murals, Paintings, and Sculpture Celebrating the Vintage Festival in Memory of Geoffrey Parsons and Lawrence Grant White

November 13–December 8: Autumn Exhibition of Work by Artist Members

December 11–January 12: Retrospective Exhibition of Work by Sidney E. Dickinson

In the Autumn Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members, the jury awarded the Art Committee Medal to Whitney North Seymour, Jr., for his oil painting, House at Rhinebeck, New York. The following Centurions received Honorable Mention: Leonard J. Robbins, for his water color, Floating Market, Bangkok; Walker O. Cain, for his pen and ink drawing, Bird in Hand; John Sloane, for his water color, Moules Marinières; and James Kip Finch, for his Small Desk. The largest popular vote was cast for Rockport Harbor, a water color by Leonard J. Robbins.

In the Autumn Exhibition of Work by Artist Members, the jury awarded the Art Committee Medal to Louis Betts, for his oil painting, Self-Portrait. Honorable Mention was awarded to Wayman Adams, for his oil painting, The Gates Brothers; Louis Bouché, for his oil painting, County Home; Albert Christ-Janer, for his oil painting, Staten Island Spirits; Eliot Clark, for his oil painting, Tuscany; and Abram Poole, for his oil painting, Dominican Woman. Albert Christ-Janer received the largest popular vote for Staten Island Spirits.

During the year, the Association acquired the following works of art:

Bronze medallion, Learned Hand by Carl Paul Jennewein, presented by the artist

The following works from the Association's collection were loaned:

To the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Girl and Gazelles by Paul Manship

To the Carnegie Institute, The Power of Music by William Sidney Mount

Elihu Root, Jr., Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON LITERATURE

THE general matters of importance to be mentioned in our report for the year 1957 are the physical changes which have been made to improve the appearance and increase the usefulness of the library. Six handsome chairs have been installed in the main reading room, each with the monogram of the club applied at the top in gold leaf. Then, an opening has been pierced through the wall of the cellar leading to the sidewalk-vault, and this direct entrance to the cellar is furnished with a steel door, replacing the old entrance which exposed the books to the outside air and, at times, resulted in their deterioration.

The matters of especial interest are the donations made by members to the library. In January, Eugene Reynal presented a handsome volume on Leonardo Da Vinci, containing 1,609 gravures, many in color, reproducing the artist's work and pictures related to it. By this time the library had acquired twelve of the volumes of The Papers of Thomas Jefferson. Some of these were presented by David H. McAlpin and Francis Brown. The others were bought with money contributed by Thomas C. Desmond, Charles Dollard, Gerald W. Johnson, George A. Sagendorph, John L. Simpson, and Carleton Sprague Smith. A sufficient amount remains to purchase the other volumes as they appear.

In May the library received the gift of two volumes entitled Mushrooms Russia and History by Valentina Pavlovna Wasson and R. Gordon Wasson. An unusual feature of this work is that among its numerous reproductions there are over a score of facsimile plates in color after water color paintings by Jean-Henri Fabre. By the end of the year the library had received a complete file of The Kipling Journal, Published Quarterly by The Kipling Society, extending from 1929 through 1957. This useful addition to the library was donated by Charles Lesley Ames.

During the year, 314 books were purchased and 83 presented to the library, making a total of 397 acquisitions for the year. On behalf of the Association, the Committee gratefully acknowledges gifts from the following members in addition to those already named:

FROM THE HOUSE COMMITTEE

THE House Committee has put in an unusually busy and interesting year, for in addition to its normal daily responsibilities it has helped to devise a couple of important changes of policy and to simplify certain bookkeeping operations of the Club.

Perhaps the most radical change is that which permits the admission of ladies, under certain circumstances, to a private dining room of the Clubhouse. In order that various estimable organizations, which happen to have lady members, may be enabled to hold meetings at the Century, the House Committee made the following recommendation to the Board of Management:

“That, subject on each occasion to the approval of the Chairman of the House Committee or some other Committee member designated by him, ladies who are members of governing boards of universities, colleges, schools, medical societies, and the like, be permitted to attend private afternoon meetings or dinners of such groups in the Medal Room of the Clubhouse."

The Board of Management approved this recommendation at its meeting of November 20th, 1957.

During the year, the Treasurer of the Association, encouraged by the House Committee, made a careful examination of the methods of bookkeeping employed by the Stewards' Department and the Business Office. The result was a recommendation, unanimously supported by the House Committee, that a business machine be purchased to reduce the amount of handwritten bookkeeping; this change is only now beginning to be felt, but it is already evident that with the new methods various committees and officers of the Club will be able to gather information much more quickly and thoroughly.

Along with increased mechanization came the dropping of the "10% advance" formerly charged on all restaurant, bar, and tobacco items. This charge is now included in the listed prices of these items.

Because of a marked falling off in attendance at the traditional midnight celebration on New Year's Eve, it was felt advisable to abandon it. In its place, an afternoon party was held on December 31st, at which the Club was host to all its members. The wisdom of this change was demonstrated by the very large number of members who attended the party and by the many favorable comments received, and the Committee feels that the new arrangement should be continued.

The Monthly Meetings of the Association have been varied and rewarding. In February, Jo Mielziner presented a plan for "The Proposed Theatre Utopia at Lincoln Square." His ingenious and attractive scheme was received with enthusiasm. In March, Otto Luening delighted his audience with an evening on "Inventions, Discoveries, and Other Things in the Arts." April brought us James H. Case, Jr., President of Bard College, who told us some of the touching experiences that followed when the college opened its doors to three hundred Hungarian refugees. At the May meeting, Gordon Wasson fascinated us with a talk on "The Divine Mushroom, an Adventure in Cultural Exploration." The June meeting was an evening of song, led by "The Century Singers," under the direction of George Mead. The "Welcome to New Members" Dinner, which opened the season in October, was addressed with humor and affection by Allen Foster.

In November, cunningly supervised by Henry Allen Moe, came the Vintage Festival in memory of Geoffrey Parsons and Lawrence Grant White. Artist members decorated the gallery with their accustomed prodigious off-hand skill, and the membership was entertained by Edward Ballantine at the piano and James F. Hendrick, who sang "Finnegan's Wake" and other songs. The last Monthly Meeting of the year brought us funny and enlightening disclosures by Russell Lynes, under the title, "Some Skeletons in the Publisher's Closet."

In behalf of the membership, the House Committee records its thanks for the following gifts made during the year: maple syrup from Walter H. Kilham, Jr.; salmon from Frank L. Babbott and C. Otto V. Kienbusch; trout, tomatoes, and cucumbers from Edward R. Finch; flowers from Francis Scott Bradford; corn from Frank Courtney Nicodemus, Jr.

It is heartening to note that the number of meals served in the Club Dining Room and in the Private Dining Rooms was substantially greater than in 1956, and that the Bar sales were a like comfort.

The House Committee takes this opportunity to commend the staff for its faithful service during the past year and to pledge its best efforts to maintain the quality of all the Club services for the coming year.

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON MUSIC

THE programs of the Committee on Music for 1957 were as follows:

Sunday, January 6: The Master Singers, Joseph Liebling, Conductor, in a program of music celebrating the New Year
Sunday, February 24: The Juilliard String Quartet, with soloists, in "A Concert of Music in Memory of Lawrence Grant White"

Sunday, March 31: "The Ballad of Baby Doe," a concert version of the American opera by Douglas Moore

Thursday, June 6: Program by "The Century Singers" in connection with the Monthly Meeting

Thursday, November 7: Music by Edward Ballantine and James Pomeroy Hendrick, on the occasion of the Monthly Meeting (Wine Festival)

The Committee also sponsored a Fortnightly Dinner on November 12 to consider the role of music in the Century.

John E. Lockwood, Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON HONORS

Award of the Century Medal. The Committee recommended to the Board of Management the award of the Century Medal to William A. Lockwood in recognition of his services to the Association, more particularly for his leadership as Chairman of the Centennial Fund Committee. At its meeting in December, 1957, the Board adopted the recommendation by acclamation, and the medal was presented to Vice-President Lockwood at the Annual Meeting on January 9, 1958.

Century Medallion. The Committee recommended to the Board of Management that the Committee on Art be requested to select a medalist to prepare a medallion portrait of President Paul Kieffer, in line with the custom of having these bronzes of all presidents of the Century. This recommendation was also adopted by the Board at its meeting in December, 1957, and Carl Paul Jennewein was subsequently commissioned to design the medallion.

Memorial to Lawrence Grant White. The Committee suggested that it would be appropriate if the friends of Lawrence Grant White arranged to provide an appropriate memorial to one who gave unsparingly in the interest and welfare of the members. The Board of Management approved this suggestion, and a committee appointed by the House Committee is preparing a plan. The committee consists of Barry Faulkner, Eric Gugler, Paul Manship, and James Kellum Smith.

OTHER MATTERS

Amendments to the Constitution. At the meeting on April 3, 1958, the Association adopted amendments to Section 2 of Article III and Sections 2 and 3 of Article VI of the Constitution as recommended by the Board of Management. The sections as amended are contained in the Constitution in this Year-Book.

Pensions for Non-Union Employees. On the recommendation of the Treasurer and the House Committee, the Board of Management adopted a resolution to provide to non-union members of the staff pensions no smaller than those of the union members.

The Committee Year. By resolution of the Board of Management in December, 1957, the standing committees appointed by the Board in January of each year will not take office until the following June 1. Heretofore, committees have taken office as soon as appointed. The action was taken in order to avoid the lost motion of changes in committee membership in the middle of the busy part of the season.

REQUIREMENTS OF
COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

AN ACT TO INCORPORATE THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

PASSED MARCH 7, 1857

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Gulian C. Verplanck, William C. Bryant, Charles M. Leupp, Asher B. Durand, John F. Kensett, William Kemble and William H. Appleton, and such other persons as are now associated as "The Century," or may hereafter become associated with them, are hereby constituted a body corporate by the name of "The Century Association," to be located in the city of New-York, for the purpose of promoting the advancement of art and literature by establishing and maintaining a library, reading room and gallery of art, and by such other means as shall be expedient and proper for that purpose.

§ 2. The said corporation shall have the power to make and adopt a constitution and by-laws, rules and regulations, for the admission, suspension and expulsion of its members, and their government, the election of its officers and to define their duties, and for the safe keeping and protection of its property and funds, and from time to time to alter or repeal such constitution, by-laws, rules and regulations. The seven persons named in the first section of this act shall constitute the trustees and managers until others are elected in their places.

§ 3. The said corporation may purchase and hold or lease any real and personal estate; provided that they shall not hold any real estate the value of which shall exceed the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

§ 4. The said corporation shall possess the general powers, and be subject to the general restrictions and liabilities prescribed in the third title of the eighteenth chapter of the first part of the Revised Statutes.

§ 5. The Legislature may at any time alter or repeal this act.

§ 6. This act shall take effect immediately.

By a special Act of the Legislature, passed March 29th, 1883, the Association was authorized to hold real estate to the value of three hundred thousand dollars. This was superseded by the general Corporation Law, under which the Association is entitled to hold real estate to the value of three million dollars.

CONSTITUTION OF THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

ARTICLE I

THIS Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts.

ARTICLE II

§ 1. The officers shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and a Treasurer; and there shall also be sixteen Trustees. Such officers, together with the Trustees, shall be a Board of Management. Of the Trustees not less than three shall be authors, not less than three artists, and not more than eight amateurs. No person shall be eligible as a trustee for more than three years in succession.

The officers and trustees shall be chosen at each annual meeting by ballot, and shall continue in office until the next annual meeting, or until their successors are elected.

§ 2. The President shall preside at the meetings of the Association; he shall also be Chairman of the Board of Management; he shall, with the Secretary, sign all written contracts and obligations of the Association, and he shall perform such other duties as the Board of Management of the Association may assign him.

The First Vice-President, or in his absence the Second Vice-President, shall discharge the duties of the President in case of his absence or during a vacancy in his office.

§ 3. The Secretary shall keep minutes of all meetings of the Association and of the Board of Management; shall notify members of their election, issue notices for all meetings of the Association, and conduct the correspondence and keep the records; which records and correspondence shall be open to the inspection of members at all reasonable times.

§ 4. The Treasurer shall collect and, under the direction of the Board of Management, disburse the funds. He shall report at the monthly meeting in February and oftener if required, on the state of the funds. His accounts shall be audited by a select committee of three, appointed or elected at the monthly meeting next previous to the annual meeting.

In case of the absence, disability, or death of the Treasurer, the President or the Board of Management shall have power to appoint a Treasurer pro tem, to serve during such absence or disability, or, in case of the death of the Treasurer, until the vacancy shall have been filled.

§ 5. Any officer or trustee may be removed, for cause, at any meeting of the Association, upon due notice, and any vacancy in an office shall be filled for the residue of the term by the Board of Management.

ARTICLE III

OF THE POWERS OF THE ASSOCIATION AT ITS GENERAL MEETINGS

§ 1. All the corporate powers remain vested in the Association, and they may be exercised at any regular meeting, subject to the restrictions herein contained.

§ 2. No sale, lease, or mortgage of any of the real property of the Association shall be made unless the Board of Management shall authorize such transaction and report its action thereon to the members of the Association and unless, subsequent to the making of such report, such transaction shall be authorized by the concurring vote of at least two-thirds of the members present at a meeting of the members at which at least sixty members are present. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

ARTICLE IV

OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

§ 1. The Board of Management shall have general charge of the affairs, funds, and property of the Association. It shall be their duty to carry out the objects and purposes thereof; and to this end they may exercise all the powers of the Association, subject to the Constitution and By-Laws, and to such action as the Association may take at its monthly or annual meetings.

§ 2. The Board of Management shall have regular meetings as often as once in each month from November to June inclusive, and they shall submit a report of the affairs of the Association at each annual meeting, and shall report at other times if required. Seven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 3. The Board of Management may invite distinguished strangers visiting the City to partake of the privileges of the Association during their stay. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

§ 4. The Board of Management shall have the power to remit the dues of any member, for such cause and for such period as in their judgment may be advisable and proper. During that period such member shall not be counted in the limitation of members. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

ARTICLE V

OF COMMITTEES AND THEIR DUTIES

§ 1. Committee on Admissions. The Committee on Admissions shall consist of twenty-one members, who shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting, and shall hold office until their successors shall be elected. At the annual meeting in January, 1889, seven members of the Committee shall be elected to serve three years, seven two years, and seven one year. At each subsequent annual meeting seven members shall be chosen to serve three years. No member of the Committee shall be eligible for re-election within one year of the expiration of three years' service on said Committee. Vacancies by death, or otherwise, may be filled by the Committee until the next annual meeting. They shall fix their own time and place of meeting. Eleven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 2. Other Committees. There shall be a House Committee and a Committee on Literature, each composed of three members of the Board of Management. There shall be an Art Committee composed of at least seven members, of whom at least three shall be members of the Board of Management. These Committees shall be appointed by the Board of Management within two weeks after each annual meeting. The Board may provide for the appointment of additional members of any of said Committees from time to time; such additional members need not be members of the Board. The particular duties of each of said Committees shall be defined by the By-Laws. [Amended March 3, 1934.]

ARTICLE VI

OF THE MEMBERS

§ 1. The number of resident members is limited to one thousand. [Amended February 6, 1892.]

§ 2. There shall also be a class of non-resident members, not exceeding eight hundred in number, to consist of persons residing permanently more than fifty miles from New York City Hall, and having no office or place of business in New York. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

§ 3. Any member who, having paid the entrance fee and the dues for one year, is absent from the United States for a continuous period of not less than twelve months shall, during his absence, be exempt from the payment of dues, provided that he shall have given to the Treasurer previous notice in writing of his intention to be absent. Absent members shall not be counted in the limitation of the number of members. In case the return of an absent member shall increase the number in his class of membership above the limit prescribed, no new member in that class shall be elected until the number shall be reduced by resignation or otherwise below such limit. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

All members of the Armed Forces of the United States, who are now members or who may be elected to membership, may at their option be held to be non-resident members during their active service. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

An artist member who has paid an entrance fee as a resident member may at his option elect to be classified as a non-resident member and be liable for annual dues as such but shall remain entitled to all the privileges of the Association, including the right of voting and of holding office. [Amended April 3, 1947.]

§ 4. No person shall be admitted as a member of the Association unless he shall have been recommended by the Committee on Admissions, on the proposal of two members not belonging to that Committee.

The name of every person proposed for admission, whether as a resident or a non-resident member, with his residence and the names of the members proposing him, shall be posted in the rooms at least fifteen days before being acted upon by the Committee. The Committee shall receive and consider all communications in reference to the persons proposed, and make careful examination as to their qualifications; it shall pass upon each name separately, and two negative votes shall be a rejection of the candidate. The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential.

At every monthly meeting of the Association the Committee shall furnish printed lists, properly classified, of the names of the persons recommended for admission, not exceeding twenty in number, and the Association shall then proceed to vote by depositing the lists with tellers appointed by the Chairman. The erasure from the list of any name shall be considered a vote in the negative. If negative votes be cast against any candidate to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast, his candidacy shall be referred back to the Committee on Admissions for further consideration. If the candidacy of such person again comes before the Association, negative votes cast against such person to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast shall exclude him from membership. [Amended January 8, 1953.]

No person so excluded shall be eligible for election within twelve months thereafter.

§ 5. Non-resident members may at any time, on and after the 30th April, 1896, be transferred from the list of resident members upon application in writing to the Treasurer. The members so transferred shall not be entitled to reimbursement of any part of the entrance fee. [Amended February 1896.]

Non-resident members shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association, except the right of voting and of holding office. They shall be subject to the Constitution and By-Laws and to all the regulations of the Association.

§ 6. The Secretary and Treasurer, two weeks previous to each monthly meeting, shall determine the number of vacancies in each class of members and certify the same to the Committee on Admissions.

§ 7. An entrance fee of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by each resident member, and of one hundred dollars by each non-resident member.

Such payment shall be made within thirty days after notice in writing of his election; or if within thirty days after such notice the member gives written notice to the Treasurer of his desire to do so, such payment may be made in four instalments, each of one quarter of the amount of the entrance fee; the first instalment shall be payable within thirty days after notice of his election, the second instalment within six months after such notice, the third instalment within twelve months after such notice, and the fourth instalment within eighteen months after such notice.

In default of such payment of the entrance fee, or the first instalment thereof, within thirty days after such notice, the member shall be deemed to have declined his election unless the Board of Management determines otherwise.

If any member fails to pay a subsequent instalment of his entrance fee when due, he shall be notified thereof in writing, and unless such instalment shall be paid within one month after such notice he shall thereupon cease to be a member unless the Board of Management determines otherwise. [Amended January 14, 1939.]

§ 8. The annual dues of resident members shall be one hundred twenty-five dollars, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November; and the annual dues of non-resident members shall be sixty-two and one-half dollars, payable on admission, and on each first day of May thereafter. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

The dues of all newly-elected members shall be computed proportionally from the first day of the month succeeding their election.

When the dues of any member shall remain unpaid for the space of three months, the Treasurer shall cause him to be notified that, unless the same be paid within one month thereafter, his membership will cease; and in case such dues shall not be paid pursuant to such notice, or such default be accounted for to the Board of Management, he shall thereupon cease to be a member.

In case any member of the non-resident class other than an artist member shall come to reside within the radius above named, or shall establish an office or place of business in the City of New York, it shall be his duty forthwith to notify the Treasurer of the Association in writing of such change, and he shall then be deemed a resident member with annual dues accordingly, and unless he has already paid the entrance fee of a resident member, he shall also pay to the Treasurer within thirty days the additional amount of entrance fees necessary to constitute him a resident member; in default of such payment he shall cease to be a member. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

It shall be the duty of each member to keep the Treasurer informed of his address.

§ 9. Honorary members may be elected from the membership of the Association on the recommendation of the Board of Management, at a regular monthly meeting, by an affirmative vote by ballot of not less than nine-tenths of the votes cast. No more than one honorary member shall be chosen in any one year. Honorary members shall be exempt from the payment of annual dues and shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office. [Amended, April 5, 1956.]

§ 10. Any member may be suspended or expelled for violation of the Constitution or By-Laws, or for any offence or misconduct which may be deemed sufficient to warrant such suspension or expulsion, by a vote, at a monthly meeting, of three-fourths of the members present, one month's previous notice having been given to the member charged. It shall be the duty of the Board of Management to report any member for action under this rule.

The Board of Management shall also have the power for a like cause, by the affirmative vote of eleven (11) of its members, after a hearing has been granted on one month's previous notice, to suspend any member from all privileges as such member indefinitely, pending further action; but any member affected thereby may require the resolution of suspension to be reported to the Association.

Membership may also be forfeited by failure to pay any indebtedness to the Association, in such manner as may be prescribed by the By-Laws.

§ 11. In the rooms of the Association, betting of any kind is strictly prohibited. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

ARTICLE VII

OF MEETINGS

§ 1. There shall be an annual meeting of the Association for the election of officers and members and other business. It shall be held on the second Thursday of January of each year, at 9 o'clock P.M.

§ 2. There shall be monthly meetings of the Association for the election of members and other business. They shall be held on the first Thursday of November, December, February, March, April, May and June at 9 o'clock P.M. [Amended June 3, 1941.]

§ 3. Special meetings may be called by the Board of Management; and they shall call a meeting at any time on the written request of ten members, which request shall specify the object of the meeting.

§ 4. The number of members necessary to constitute a quorum at an annual meeting shall be fifty, and at a monthly or special meeting shall be thirty.

ARTICLE VIII

OF AMENDMENTS

§ 1. This Constitution shall commence and take effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870, and the previous Constitution thereupon shall cease.

§ 2. No alteration or amendment of this Constitution shall be made unless the same be proposed at a previous regular meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and be finally adopted at a subsequent meeting by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

§ 3. By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, not inconsistent with the Charter or this Constitution, may be made, adopted, altered, or repealed at any monthly or annual meeting; provided, the proposed by-law, rule, regulation, alteration, or repeal shall have been proposed at a previous monthly meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and shall be adopted by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

BY-LAWS

§ 1. No book, journal, paper, picture, statue, or other work of art, the property of the Association, shall be taken from the rooms, under any pretext whatever, except by authority of the Board of Management.

§ 2. On the first day of each month or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, there shall be sent to each member notice of his indebtedness to the Association on the last day of the preceding month, and if the same is not paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month the names of the members so in default, together with the amounts due, shall be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

In case any such indebtedness shall not be discharged at the expiration of a month from the date of such first notice, a second notice shall be mailed to the member in default, notifying him that further credit will not be extended to him until his indebtedness is discharged, and that in case he continues in such default for ten days thereafter, he will be excluded from all privileges of the Association until such indebtedness is paid, and such member shall thereupon, upon the expiration of such ten days, be so excluded, and notice to that effect shall thereupon be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

At any time during such exclusion the Board of Management may declare the membership of such delinquent to be forfeited, and his name shall thereupon be dropped from the roll of members.

But before such action shall be taken by the Board of Management, it shall cause a copy of this By-Law to be mailed to the delinquent member.

A copy of this By-Law shall be sent with such second notice.

§ 3. A suggestion book shall be kept at the rooms in which every member is authorized to enter, under his signature, any complaint as to the management of the Association, and any suggestions he may desire to make.

§ 4. Visitors:

(a) A member may introduce a guest to the rooms of the Association for one day by entering the name and address of such guest and the date in the book to be kept for that purpose. This privilege may be suspended for any particular day by the House Committee. A member may not introduce the same person as a daily guest more than twice in the calendar year, and may not introduce more than one daily guest on the same day.

(b) A member may invite visitors to the Art Gallery during any Art Exhibition of the Association through signing cards of invitation printed for that purpose, but such cards of invitation shall not entitle visitors to pass to other parts of the house.

(c) A member may introduce guests to the private dining room when he has reserved that room for an entertainment.

(d) The House Committee, at the request in writing of a member, may extend the privileges of the Association for a total period of one month in any twelve months to a guest whose residence is more than fifty miles from the City Hall. Extension of this time may, on the recommendation of the House Committee, be granted by the Board of Management.

A member may not obtain from the House Committee such privileges for more than one guest at a time, nor for the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months. Guest privileges extended by the House Committee or on its recommendation may be terminated at the discretion of the Committee at any time. [Amended May 6, 1954.]

(e) Guests while enjoying the privileges of the Association as provided in paragraphs (a) and (d) are on the same footing as non-resident members, except that they may not introduce visitors and may not be present at any business meeting of the Association. Nor shall the House Committee grant the same privileges to the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months.

(f) A member who obtains admission to the club-house for a guest becomes responsible for the conduct of such guest and for any indebtedness of such guest to the Association.

(g) The Board of Management may modify these rules to meet special cases.

(h) It is the duty of the House Committee to enforce the provisions of this section and promptly to report to the Board of Management all cases of persistent violation thereof.

(i) In case of violation of any of the provisions of this section, the House Committee may summarily suspend the privileges accorded therein with regard to any member or visitor for a period not exceeding ten days, and in all cases of violation the Board of Management may suspend such privileges for such period as in their discretion the interest of the Association may require.

(j) In addition to the powers herein above granted, the Board of Management may provide for the invitation of authors, artists, and composers of music to be guests of the Association.

Such invitations shall be for the term of one year but shall be renewable; and the total number so invited shall not exceed fifty at any one time. [Amended November 5, 1942.]

§ 5. The House Committee shall have the charge of furnishing supplies, employing stewards and servants, keeping the rooms and premises of the Association in order for use, regulating the place, character and the extent of recreation and amusements in the club-house, and enforcing the rule as to admission of visitors. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

The care of newspapers and current periodicals is entrusted to the House Committee.

§ 6. The Committee on Literature shall have charge of the Library, and of the supply of books, and shall subscribe for periodicals and newspapers. Loud or continuous conversation shall not be carried on in the Library, nor, except on Thursday nights, shall refreshments be served therein.

§ 7. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all works of art owned or possessed by the Association; and it shall be their duty to make arrangements for exhibition, at monthly and annual meetings, of the works of artists of the Association, and other works of art, at their discretion. They shall keep a catalogue of the works of art owned or possessed by the Association, or exhibited in its rooms, and shall record therein every such work, with the name of the author, the title of the work, and the time of exhibition. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all decorations of the rooms. No work of art shall be accepted as a gift, or purchased by the Association, until the Committee on Art has made a report thereon to the Board of Management.

§ 8. The expenditures of the House Committee, and the Committees on Literature and Art, shall be limited to such sums as the Board of Management shall prescribe.

§ 9. A perfect list of members, officers, and committees shall be kept posted up in the rooms of the Association; and such list shall be corrected under the direction of the Treasurer and Secretary, from time to time, as changes occur.

§ 10. The above By-Laws shall go into effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870.

§ 11. A Nominating Committee shall annually be constituted as follows. The Board of Management shall at its last spring meeting propose as candidates for such committee the names of seven members of the Club, of whom two shall be members of the Board of Management, not eligible for re-election, and two shall be members of the Committee on Admissions. The names shall be posted in the club-house at least twenty days before the November monthly meeting of the Club. At any time not later than ten days before the November monthly meeting, additional candidates may be proposed for the Committee, provided that in each case the proposal, indorsed by twenty-five resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

All the names proposed by either of the above methods shall be printed in a single list, the names proposed by the Board of Management being designated by an asterisk. From this list, which shall be distributed at the monthly meeting in November, the Club shall elect by ballot the Nominating Committee. Each member may vote for not more than seven names on the list, and the seven candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

The Nominating Committee shall at the earliest practicable moment post in the club-house the names of candidates for all the positions to be filled. Additional candidates for such positions or any of them, may be nominated, and shall be posted, provided that in each case the nomination, indorsed by fifty resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club not later than one week before the Annual Meeting.

The Secretary of the Club shall prepare printed lists of all candidates named by either of the aforesaid methods, the names to be grouped under the titles of the positions to be filled; the candidates for Trustees to be arranged in three groups, designated respectively as Authors, Artists, and Amateurs, and all names proposed by the Nominating Committee to be designated by an asterisk. These lists shall be distributed to members at the Annual Meeting, and shall serve as ballots in the election, provided that nothing herein be construed to restrict the right of any member to vote by means of written names for persons whose names do not appear in print.

§ 12. An Investment Committee consisting of four members and the Treasurer shall be appointed by the Board of Management annually. It shall be the duty of this committee to supervise the investments of the Club and to advise the Treasurer with respect to the purchase and sale of its investments.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

FOR the guidance of members of the Association, the Year-Book contains the Requirements of the Committee and the extract from the Committee's minutes concerning the interpretation of "amateurs of letters and the fine arts."

With respect to letters concerning candidates, the members of the Association are requested to send to the Committee such information, whether favorable or unfavorable, as they feel will assist in the consideration of a candidate. Article I of the Constitution declares: "This Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts." The mere endorsement of a name is of little help to the Committee in determining whether a candidate, whatever his vocation, has such breadth of interest and qualities of mind as would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in such a society.

Members are requested not to propose, second, or endorse more than one candidate in any one letter.

All communications are confidential. After final action has been taken on a candidate, letters unfavorable to him are returned to their writers by registered mail. The letters of proposers and seconders are deposited in the archives, and all other letters are destroyed, except that, by a two-thirds vote of the Committee, any particular letter may be preserved in the archives. "The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential." (Constitution, Article VI)

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. The proposer must write to the Committee, stating the name, address, and qualifications of the candidate. The letter should convey definite information as to the candidate's background, vocation, attainments, character, and personality. If he is not an artist or an author, it should also give evidence as to those interests and tastes outside of his vocation which would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in a society of artists and authors.
2. The seconder must also write to the Committee in regard to the candidate. The letter should contain information of a character similar to that outlined for the proposer's letter.
3. The name, address, and vocation * of the candidate shall be entered in the Candidates' Book, preferably by the proposer and seconder, with their signatures. The Secretary of the Committee may make such entry when the letters of recommendation have been received from both proposer and seconder. A candidacy is not completed until these letters have been received and the entry has been made.
4. The candidate must be known to at least two members of the Committee if he is a candidate for resident membership or to at least one member if he is a candidate for non-resident membership. To facilitate the introduction of candidates to members of the Committee, proposers and seconders are asked to get in touch with the Chairman of the Sub-Committee to which the candidate has been assigned.

* The Committee on Admissions has long interpreted the term "amateur" as relating to "breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination" rather than to "occupation." It therefore suggests to proposers that in filling the space (in the Candidates' Book) designated "occupation," they use some term other than "amateur" to describe the candidate's "profession or occupation," in compliance with Rule I of the Committee, as adopted by the Association.

5. The Committee must receive, in addition to the letters of the proposer and seconder, at least ten letters from other members of the Association concerning a candidate for resident membership or at least six letters concerning a candidate for non-resident membership. These letters should do more than merely endorse a candidate; they should contain information which will be a source of enlightenment to the Committee as to the candidate's qualifications.

"AMATEURS OF LETTERS AND THE FINE ARTS"

[From the Minutes of the Committee on Admissions, January 3, 1923]

Your special Committee appointed to consider the difficulties that have lately developed within the Admissions Committee over the interpretation of the word "amateur" in Article I of the Constitution, and to report on a suggestion that Article I should be amended, has made inquiries, has considered, and now reports.

We find that for more than sixty years the Committee on Admissions has been guided in passing upon qualifications of candidates not by such a narrow interpretation of the words "amateurs of letters and the fine arts" as would have required candidates to be experts or connoisseurs, but rather by the view that those words as used in the Constitution were intended to admit gentlemen of any occupation provided their breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination made them sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companions in a society of authors and artists. We believe that this construction has long been clearly expressed through the Century's membership, and that the Admissions Committee may now regard it as being sanctioned and established by long usage and tradition. Consequently, we also think that the Admissions Committee need not hesitate to govern itself accordingly, and need not call upon the Club to undertake the difficult task of formulating a precise definition of the word "amateur."

On the other hand, we see no reason why it should not be admitted here that the Admissions Committee has erred in particular cases. It seems better to recognize this than to let anyone suppose that mistakes are to be accepted as precedents for a lax standard. This is stated because confusion has lately resulted from just that supposition.

The Admissions Committee should make it clear to all its members that it intends to interpret "amateur" very broadly, but never to interpret it so loosely as to cover candidates who do not clearly possess what may be called a responsive sympathy with letters and the fine arts, no matter how eminent or successful they may be, no matter how respectable socially, or how deserving of recognition on special grounds. It is understood that the writer of a technical treatise is not such an "author" as the Constitution intends; similarly, a mere collector, no matter how untiring, might well stand outside our broadest interpretations of "amateur." We do not want spiritual mediocrity. Our standard is obviously hard to define. But if the word "culture" did not sound priggish to some ears, it would perhaps suggest most briefly what the Century requires of a candidate quite apart from any special kind of ability or success.

THE CENTURY MEMORIALS

BY THE HISTORIAN

Howard Carter Baird

Howard C. Baird was born in Louisville in 1868, and educated in the public schools. He became a civil engineer; and, among other things, he designed and supervised the construction of the Bear Mountain Bridge, and he designed the Croton Lake Bridge. His office was in the City, and he worked here all his life.

Baird was very thoroughly an engineer. He consorted with engineers, and was a member of a lot of engineering associations and institutes, and he was regarded by the experts as exceedingly competent.

He was unmarried; and as he grew older the Century became his home, and he was in the Club a great deal. He used to play cards with the bridge group. His habits were regular, and he tended to do the same things in the same way every day—like all old bachelors. When travel about the streets became dangerous for him, he took a room near the Club and lived there a good part of the time.

He was a modest man, full of kindness and consideration for others. He lived a long time, and his progress through this vale was peaceful and pleasant.

Charles Montague Bakewell

Charles M. Bakewell graduated from the University of California (Berkeley) in 1889, and took a Ph.D. at Harvard in 1894. He also studied philosophy at the Universities of Berlin, Strasbourg, and Paris. In 1905, after teaching at Harvard, Berkeley, and Bryn Mawr, he became Professor of Philosophy at Yale, and there he remained until he retired in 1933.

His entire life was given to philosophy; and he liked it so well at Yale that he rejected offers to head the Department of Philosophy at Harvard and to be president of the University of California. Particularly, he was influenced by Socrates, from whom he acquired his critical skepticism and his idealism, and by William James, from whom he got his pluralism. These tenets became so much a part of him that they profoundly affected the administration of the Yale Department of Philosophy and resulted in calling to the faculty men of diverse rather than similar philosophical positions.

After each monthly meeting of the New York Philosophy Club he and his Yale colleagues used to stop at Neale's Bar next to the 125th Street railroad station, and there, and on the train going back to New Haven, he would talk about Socrates, and William James, and Emerson. He found life good and believed, to the end, that the ideal and the good refer, as religion maintains, not merely to man's subjective yearnings, but to the object of his knowledge also. He used to quote from a Scotsman, in Lavengro: "Ay, but the heather on the heath is sweet, Sandy."

He retired, as Professor Emeritus, in 1933; and he ran for Congress as Representative-at-Large from Connecticut, and was elected, as a Republican, to the 73rd Congress. He lost in two bids for re-election: the Democratic tide overwhelmed even the Fairfield County station-wagon set. He was too forthright to be a successful politician. He held, with Socrates, that when the skeptic insists that skepticism is true for everyone, then he is not a true skeptic, but, to that extent, a dogmatic believer; and he was impatient with dogmatism, and conformity, and the unconsidered platitudes and patter of public life.

His decision to continue at Yale, no matter what the inducements to change, was characteristic of Bakewell, for he well knew the manner of man he wanted to be, and as nearly attained this as is given to any of us.

Edwin deTurck Bechtel

Ned Bechtel graduated from Harvard, summa cum laude, in 1903. This is an achievement worthy of remark. He took the A.M. in 1904, and graduated from the Law School in 1908. Thus there is observable a certain leisureliness about his formal education, and this gave him time to mature before he came downtown and commenced to practise law. He started in the offices of Carter, Ledyard, and Milburn, and he worked there all his active life, retiring in 1948 as the senior member of the firm.

Ned was only in the middle sixties when he retired, but he did this because he had vivid, vital interests outside the law. As he said himself, he "was able to combine other interests with spinning the squirrel-cage of the law," and he was well advised to save his last decade for what he really wanted to do.

He was an authority on etching. He wrote the best book on Daumier that has ever been written; and he did a biographical monograph of Jacques Callot, with 237 reproductions of that artist's work, which is fascinating.

Besides the graphic arts, the other great interest of his life was roses. He had a garden at Mt. Kisco with six or seven hundred rose plants in it, and he could tell the ancestral history and characteristics of every one of them. He was a student of the techniques of hybridization, and he knew more about rose culture than anyone else in the land. He had been president and board chairman of the New York Botanical Garden, and of the Horticultural Society of New York; and he used to open his own garden to visitors from time to time.

To be a gardener is to be in accord with the universe, and gardeners are happy, contented folk. Nobody gets angry arguing about flowers. Everyone's hand is against the weeds, and the common enemy makes for peace on earth and good will among men.

Carl Brandt

Carl Brandt's mother died when he was young; his father, who was the house physician at the Homestead, Hot Springs, was either feeling very affluent or else he was dead broke. Carl was either riding to the hounds, taking golf lessons from the pro, and shooting at clay pigeons, or else he was working on railroad surveys in West Virginia. At one point his father noticed that Carl was complaining that the bell boys did not run fast enough when called, and so he sent his son to a small school conducted by Major Gwathmey, formerly of the Confederate army. The school was on what remained of the old Gwathmey farm outside of Richmond (not even a plantation), where Carl passed several years of high thinking but very plain living, and where he learned more about the South than he did at Hot Springs. Then, for one or two years, he was switched to Westminster School in England. At the age of about sixteen he matriculated at Randolph-Macon College, Virginia.

This catholicity of his early experience operated to produce the best literary agent of his time, and Carl came to have as clients a truly astonishing list of distinguished writers, from Conrad to Cozzens. But he was much more than a literary agent. The duties of a literary agent are mechanical and impersonal. Carl's interpretation of his responsibilities was vastly broader.

To his clients, old and new, he was far more than their ten percent could ever pay for. He not only carried the burden of their business problems, but he was unfailingly at call in any emergency, moral, financial, or professional. The number of clients he guided through marital complications, extricated from personal and private difficulties, provided with doctors, lawyers, bail, and loans, protected from the legitimate consequences of their own folly, goaded from inertia into activity, restored from discouragement and despair, and, in general, kept upon the main line of endeavor and productivity is quite beyond calculation. His sense of responsibility toward those who leaned upon him—and they were legion—amounted to an assumption of guardianship.

The great reason for his success rested in this realm of gentleness and kindness. He lost enormous sums of money that he advanced to indigent authors, many of whom he knew were hopeless, but the affection and good will that he generated among all the writers and editors who ever knew him outbalanced the red figures. Outside of his warm love for his family, his clients were his life. And thus he could endure to read millions of words, most of them worse than mediocre, and still wind up by finding something many times a day that amused and delighted him that its author might emphasize or change for the better. He encouraged them, and they needed encouragement.

Always he was the tolerant and protective friend, the humorously patient counsellor.

John Bartlet Brebner

John Bartlet Brebner was born in Toronto and went for two years to the University there, but he took his A.B. at St. John's College, Oxford, in 1920. He studied further at Oxford (Litt.D.1925) and took a Ph.D. at Columbia in 1927. He stayed at Columbia and taught modern history, coming up through all the ranks to become, eventually, Gouveneur Morris Professor of History.

He was considerably involved, all his life, with Canada, the United States, and Great Britain. He was thoroughly versed in the history of each and all of them, and was exceedingly competent in relating the past to the present. His course on British constitutional history was "a must for pre-law students"; but it was also a provoking and stimulating review of the rise of parliamentary government in the world that commanded the admiration of very grown-up people also. Indeed Brebner had the distinction of being publicly castigated by Senator McCarthy as a menace to one-hundred-percent Americans, by whom he was distrusted as an intellectual.

Bart was the university orator at the final convocation of Columbia's bicentennial celebration in October, 1954. He decried the "hurricane of investigations and persecutions that had lashed countries and peoples, and the dreadful assumption that every man must always be right." There never had been any question where Columbia stood; nevertheless, it was pleasing to have it made official.

He hated the practice of ghostwriting, and wouldn't do it. But a Columbia trustee, being required to make an address involving some learned overtones, repaired to him for help. Bart recommended a graduate student, who undertook the job; but it rather got away from him. So Bart took over the student's draft, and anonymously made it into a casual-sounding speech that simply brought down the house.

His mind was orderly and organized. When he thought or spoke about anything, he began at the right end and put the idea into operation before drawing conclusions. Thus, he was able to consider concepts that at first appeared very complicated, but that under his approach seemed to become simple and intelligible. Afterwards, it was hard to remember exactly how he got from the premise to the judgment.

If only there were more teachers like this, the profession would not have fallen from its high estate, and the loud laugh that speaks the vacant mind would not now be echoing through the land.

*Truth from his lips prevail'd with double sway,
And fools, who came to scoff, remain'd to pray.*

Arthur Brown, Jr.

Arthur Brown was an architect, like his father before him, and a very considerable figure in the architectural world. He graduated from the University of California in 1896 (B.S. in Civil Engineering); and then he went to the Beaux-Arts in Paris. There he soon gained an enviable reputation as a designer and draftsman, and won many coveted prizes.

From the start, he was a scholar versed in the works of the great masters of the past, and he clung steadfastly to the scholarly approach in his designs. He was the McKim of his generation. His buildings were many in his native state—perhaps the best known are the City Halls in San Francisco, Berkeley, and Pasadena. Even after the wave of modernism swept over our country, he was much esteemed and his advice sought by his contemporaries here and in France. There, he was elected an Officer of the Légion d'honneur and an Associate of the Academie des Beaux-Arts of the Institut de France (a rare honor for a foreigner); in this country, to membership in the National Academy of Design and the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

He was a devoted Centurion, with a gift for making friends. Many members will remember long talks with him that often lasted until the bar closed. He could not often come East, but it was a pleasure for many in his own and other professions when he could pass a week or two in New York and haunt the Century.

William Adams Brown, Jr.

William Adams Brown prepared at The Hill School, and graduated from Yale in 1917. He worked as a clerk in Brown Brothers for some years, and became exceedingly interested in economics so that he went to Columbia and took the Ph.D. He then taught economics at Brown for some fifteen years and left there to go to the Second World War. In 1946 he joined the staff of The Brookings Institution in Washington, and there he worked the rest of his life.

Brown was a first-class economist and he wrote a remarkable book, The International Gold Standard Reinterpreted, that was recognized in Europe and America as a work of authority. His abiding concern was the condition of international economic relations and the development of a foreign exchange system as a substitute for the gold standard. He studied the classical economists in this connection, and watched the evolving of current practices and their results with a keen understanding of what was taking place.

He was troubled also by the departure in international affairs from adherence to the long-accepted codes of moral conduct; and he used to talk a good deal about this in personal conversation. He was entirely aware that Christian values are factors in economic problems, and he said so in terms intelligible to economists.

Brown was well advised to give up a business career for teaching and research. He was essentially a scholar, and to the field of economics he brought a wide interest in everything that was going on. In his hands economics was not confined to the production and distribution of wealth, but embraced the whole function of property in the modern world.

He worked for The Brookings Institution, and he lived in Washington, and so he was not at the Club very much. When he came, his old-fashioned clothes amusingly belied his new-fashioned point of view.

Richard Evelyn Byrd

Richard E. Byrd prepared at V.M.I. and went to the University of Virginia, as a good Virginian should; but after a year he transferred to the United States Naval Academy, and in 1912 was commissioned Ensign. Thus he was embarked on a career that eventually would have put him in command of a cruiser as the romantic and medieval prerequisite to becoming an Admiral.

A far-seeing Providence decreed otherwise.

In his senior year at Annapolis he broke his ankle playing football against Princeton, and then later smashed the ankle and his foot in a bad fall from the flying rings in the gymnasium. He managed to graduate with his class and went to sea; but after five years, unable to carry his weight on the injured ankle for the long watches on shipboard, he was forced to retire.

When the First World War came along, he was recalled to active duty in the Navy and was put behind a desk in Washington; but he did not like this at all, and he managed to get himself assigned to a flying school. He learned to fly and became exceedingly expert in aerial navigation—inventing several important instruments that contributed to greater accuracy. He wanted to fly a plane to Europe and worked on the preliminaries; but they left him behind. Then he worked on a proposed flight of the dirigible Shenandoah over the North Pole in 1924; but the project was called off by President Coolidge.

At this time he was promoted by Congress to be lieutenant commander, and this increase in rank gave him a chance to push for support for an Arctic flight; and this support he got from Edsel Ford and John D. Rockefeller, Jr. With Floyd Bennett he made several notable flights over Greenland and Ellesmere Land. It was dangerous flying, accompanied by depressing toil of preparation; but it gave him his first taste of the North, and he liked it. The mystery and silence of the frozen wastes got into his blood. In 1926 he flew over the North Pole. In 1929 he flew over the South Pole. He was voted the Congressional Medal and promoted to Rear Admiral.

He discovered the entire eastern boundary of the Ross Sea, and the huge mountains at the western end. He found the vast trough of ice between Victoria Land and Wilkes Land, thousands of square miles; and in this chute is spawned the vilest weather in the world, and through it glides the glacial ice into the Indian Ocean.

All of us have had dreams of adventure: to be the first to round the Cape of Good Hope, to blaze the camel trail to far Cathay, to see the broad Pacific from a peak in Darien. But only a few of us have the force of character to persevere in the meticulous preparation that leaves nothing to chance and to endure the tribulations and disappointments of the performance that are the price to make the dreams come true. These chosen men are not easy characters. They burn with a bright flame. They go their way alone, carrying the world forward, opening new horizons, rolling back the frontier.

*For to admire an' for to see,
For to be'old this world so wide—
It never done no good to me
But I can't drop it if I tried!*

Zechariah Chafee, Jr.

Zack Chafee was born and brought up in the Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, and, in fulfillment of the course of nature, he graduated from Brown in 1907 with highest honors. Years afterward, Brown gave him an LL.D.

He tried for two or three years working in the family foundry; but it didn't go well, and he went off to Harvard Law School, where he graduated cum laude in 1913. He practised law for three years in Providence, and then in 1916 he returned to the Law School to teach there; and he was a member of the faculty for more than forty years: in 1938 as Langdell Professor of Law and, at the end, as University Professor—a position of high distinction that permitted him to study and teach the “frontiers of knowledge” in any department of the University.

His chief fame came from his fierce and unrelenting espousal of the right of free speech; he wrote the best books and briefs on that subject that have been written, and he accumulated a very fine collection of detractors. In 1952 Senator McCarthy, then at the height of his power, named Zack as one of the seven persons most dangerous to the United States. Zack couldn't have cared less, but it made the Senator highly ridiculous in the civilized regions of the country and certainly contributed to his ultimate downfall.

How to make everyone see that potentially he walks with every condemned man to the scaffold, stands in the prisoner's dock with every defendant denied the right of counsel, halts at the bar with every accused bribed or beaten into testifying against himself—how to make the complacent, solid citizen understand that it is he, not merely some despicable subversive, who is protected by the Bill of Rights! This is the hardest lesson in freedom to make plain. This is the lesson men forget when they are afraid.

It was when Zack began to think, and then to write, and finally to act in defense of the rights of men to be men—of the right of an individual to be an individual—that Clio memorized his name for her chronicles. For he lived in a time when the defense of the right of an individual to differ with the majority had come to be an astonishing thing. Men distrusted ideas that were different, and pursued their authors with bells, books, and candles.

Zack not only defended the freedom of the mind, but he cared about the mind—about its capacity, its inventiveness, its aspirations, its fantasies. Which is simply to say that he was a civilized man in a time when not many men were civilized.

Wilford Seymour Conrow

Wilford S. Conrow graduated from Princeton in 1901, and went into the wholesale paper business. This was a family enterprise; but he could not bear it, and he broke away after ten years to study to be a painter, first at the New York School of Art and then at the Beaux-Arts. He never regretted this move.

He became a very good portrait painter and exceedingly prolific: his pictures are hung in colleges, clubs, and public buildings all over the country, among other places in the City in the National Academy of Design and the New York Historical Society.

He was a gregarious person and easy to associate with; and he was always taking a lively interest in the affairs of his acquaintances, and, in particular, in encouraging those having promising abilities in the arts or those not receiving what he considered was proper recognition of their accomplishments. He belonged to an extraordinary number of artists' associations and societies, and he had a good time expressing his views on how and what to paint. He conceived that there was a correlation between art and mathematics, and he wrote a book on symmetry that skirts the borders of numerology.

Wilford's outstanding characteristic was his openhanded friendliness and active search for ways to help others.

Carleton Sprague Cooke

Carleton Sprague Cooke prepared at Exeter, and graduated from Harvard in 1899. He took his senior year in the Harvard Law School, but completed his training at the Buffalo University Law School and was admitted to the Bar in 1901. He remarked of himself that he was a lawyer by vocation, and a soldier and sailor by avocation—and so he was.

He practised law in the City for nearly fifty years. Very early he joined Squadron A, and he spent twenty years as a cavalryman. In 1926 he built the ketch, Seven Bells, and he used to cruise in the Sound and the waters north of the Cape. He had a good time at these occupations and became extraordinarily competent at them.

Carl was a tough-minded man. He always seemed to know what he was doing and what he wanted to do. In the period between the wars, card playing broke out in the Club, and he was one of the regulars at bridge. When he cut out of a rubber, he had a marvellous faculty of being able to doze in his chair impervious to the bidding, groans, or exultations. He said that as a cavalry officer he had learned to sleep on horseback, and that it was considerably easier than in the bridge chairs.

He was a member of the Century for forty years, faithful in attendance, not in the least shy, a pleasant and amusing companion.

Thomas Ridgway Coward

Timmy Coward prepared at Groton, and studied at Yale 1915–18, when he went off to the War without waiting to finish. He was a publisher, and he progressed from the Yale University Press to Bobbs-Merrill; and then in 1927 he organized Coward-McCann and had his own firm.

Timmy was a person who gave out sparks of vitality. He was full of exuberant energy and just as violently competitive at chess as he was at tennis. He got to be national squash-tennis champion at one time, but he had a flair for any game with a ball—even golf. It is exceedingly astonishing that he combined this talent with a thorough knowledge of English literature and a sure instinct in the publishing business. He not only was a good publisher and diligent, but he was wonderfully popular with everybody else in the business.

He had a good deal of the grand seigneur about him: he did not like to be bothered with details, and was impatient with people who fussed. When he told his secretary that he had been made president of the Yale Club, she said to him: "That's fine; I congratulate you. However, although without a murmur I have shopped for you at Brooks Brothers, sent presents to your children on their birthdays, and got you to your engagements on time, I'll be damned if I will be president of the Yale Club."

He had a magical gift for making friends. He used to go to London and scout around for writers and books, and his relationship with English publishers was not to be observed without emotion. They not only liked and respected him, but obviously regarded him with affection.

Timmy was only sixty when he died. He had a joyous life lighted with humor and a generous spirit. He was one fit to live in the Abbey of Theleme where the motto was: "Fay ce que voudras."

Horace Andrew Davis

Horace A. Davis prepared at the Cambridge Latin School, and graduated from Harvard in 1891 (Phi Beta Kappa). He then went to the Harvard Law School, graduating in 1894.

He practised law in New York till 1910 and became an active member of the American Labor Party. He had various labor people and trade unions for clients, and was intermittently associated with the running of Empire Trust Company, which was owned by union interests. Then he went into the advertising business in Boston, but in 1922 he returned to New York as vice-president of Empire Trust Company.

He was darkly glowered upon by the unregenerate. He had a cousin, Chandler Davis. If one spoke to Chandler about Horace, he denounced him as a bolshevik; if one spoke to Horace about Chandler, he said nothing whatever. He was in the Club a good deal; but, except for cards, he was usually alone, reading. He used to play bridge with John W. Davis and Carleton Cooke, and the others of that group—an occupation that seems of late to have fallen into desuetude.

He was a member of the Century for thirty-seven years, and died aged 87.

Samuel Martin Dorrance

Sam Dorrance prepared at St. Marks, and graduated from Harvard, cum laude, in 1905. He then took a B.D. degree at the Episcopal Theological Seminary in Cambridge, and was ordained a priest in 1908. He served at Trinity Church, Ashland, Oregon, till 1911, and then he became rector of St. George's Church, Central Falls, Rhode Island. He liked this. He derived originally from Providence, and this took him home again among folks who spoke and thought as he did himself.

He came to New York in 1919, and served as vicar at the Chapel of the Holy Trinity in St. James' Parish. Then he became rector of St. Ann's Church in Brooklyn, and he labored there for many years. He punctuated these consecrated employments by being general secretary of the Episcopal Church Congress and a trustee of St. Mark's School.

There was a winsomeness about Sam that was quite disarming. He had a way of appraising one immediately; and he did this without giving offense or inflicting pain. Then when he came to say something, it had an added weight because one felt he knew whom he was talking to. He was sensitive without being sentimental; and he knew what was bothering his sheep much better than they did themselves. So he was a pastor par excellence.

Walter Prichard Eaton

Walter Eaton prepared at Andover, and graduated from Harvard in 1900. He became involved with drama and play-acting at college, and the career he chose in the theatre began in 1902 with his assignment as assistant drama critic of the Tribune. From there he went to the Sun. He wrote some plays, some books on the theatre, and some very good tales of outdoor ramblings in the Berkshires.

In 1933 he was appointed Professor of Playwriting at Yale, and he taught there until his retirement in 1947. Among his preoccupations were the ideas that the American stage was a struggling business, and that Hollywood was draining off both acting and writing talent. He did not like Hollywood. He said that the movies did not furnish a creative outlet but only the opportunity for passive acceptance. The dumb inertia of the screen-addicts seemed to him a spiritual degradation.

Most of us suffer from this melancholy when we regard the movies. It seems to be a vocational malady endemic among the educated; and the lamentations and denouncements of Eaton were exceedingly pleasant to the ears of those who live along the northeastern seaboard. Besides, he was a most amusing person—the author of jokes that have become part of the Yale tradition. They were very kind to him at Yale (considering he was the immutable product of the Other Institution) and entirely aware of the importance of his contribution to the University. His last years he lived at Chapel Hill, where he was surrounded by cloistered shades and understanding friends.

Herbert Berridge Elliston

Herbert B. Elliston was born in England in 1895. In the First World War he served as Signaller in the Royal Horse Artillery and was recommended on the battlefield for a commission.

He was a newspaper man. He came to New York in 1922, and wrote editorials, first for the Sun and then for the Herald. In 1940 he became an editor of the Washington Post and directed the editorial page of that paper and wrote most of it. He had, like Cobb of the World, and like Geoffrey Parsons of the Tribune, the true genius of an editor. Readers were sharply aware of his personality, and came to need it and rely on it. He brought to his work not only a long and wide experience in human affairs and a thorough, professional skill in the newspaper art, but also a truly free, and wholehearted, and magnanimous spirit. When he retired in 1953, he was asked whether he had a guiding principle for conducting an editorial page.

"No, I haven't," he said. "But if I had, it would be a line from Somerset Maugham: 'If a nation values anything more than freedom, it will lose its freedom; and the irony of it is that if it is comfort or money that it values more, it will lose that too.'"

He never spent much time or effort trying to please everybody and offend nobody—even the cursed advertisers. He just thought a paper could not be run that way. An Englishman by birth and an American by choice, he was an internationalist in the best sense. He understood America's responsibilities in the new kind of a world that came into being during his lifetime, and he was one of the leaders in the great task of public education that the country's new position required. He was impatient alike with the Truman and the Eisenhower administrations for not "coming to terms between policy-making and platitudinizing," and the yearns of the dogooders galled him.

He was not always right; but he was a gallant fighter, and the isolationists, the witch-hunters, and the conformists will bear to their graves scars from his pen. While the newspaper calling breeds men like this, be sure that neither the Communists nor Lucifer himself shall prevail against us.

Haven Emerson

Haven Emerson graduated from Harvard in 1896, and from Columbia P. & S. in 1899. He died in the same month as his brother, William. Haven was a doctor; and he went into his father's new specialty, public health, and worked furiously at it.

His career of almost a half-century spanned the revolutionary changes in the history of public health that added twenty years to the life-span of the average American at birth. He had, himself, treated the last case of cholera in New York City. Diphtheria, enteritis, typhoid fever, and even osteomyelitis are almost gone as menaces to childhood. Infant mortality is one fifth the hazard that it was when he began to practise in the field of public health. American acceptance, as early as 1913, of pasteurization of milk and of tuberculin testing of cattle produced in twenty years a national milk supply of almost uniform purity—a fact with which he never hesitated to needle his British colleagues, confounded, even as late as the outbreak of the last war, with secondary tubercular infections in children.

Emerson abominated what most doctors must come to regard as their professional allies the proprietary medicines, the glossy health advertisements, the pharmaceutical labs that claim specific cures in their own variations of a standard formula. He never cleaned his teeth with anything but soap, maintained that the average American had all the vitamins he needed in a natural diet, and told a group of his peers, ravished by a new and gleaming two-million-dollar medical “plant,” that “the test of a doctor’s skill is what he can do with his brains, his faith, and carbolic soap.”

He was a superb and dedicated nagger in what the public barely knew to be in the public interest. One year he would be bullying shipbuilders to redesign their ships’ bottoms so as to flush out the rodent carriers of malaria and yellow fever. The next he would lay down a barrage of attacks on the Government’s hypocrisy in its handling of the Indian health services. The mere sight of rouge and scarlet nail polish on a girl in the Subway would stir him to blast the entire cosmetic industry, and the smell of liquor on a doctor’s breath would inflame his life-long abhorrence of alcohol.

Except for his being in favor of trying to enforce the Volstead Act (which, fortunately, was repealed before he really got going) we are all under great obligations to Emerson. He annoyed the people who ought to be annoyed, and he unmercifully castigated the lazy, the incompetent, and the complacent. He was able to do this because he led a blameless life, and he cared not at all what others thought about him. He was the last of the great Puritans.

William Emerson

William Emerson graduated from Harvard in 1895 and then entered the Columbia School of Architecture. After two years he went to the Beaux-Arts, and continued there for several years studying architecture.

He practised architecture in New York till 1919, specializing in model tenements; and then he joined the faculty of the School of Architecture at M.I.T. serving as Chairman of the faculty and Dean until his retirement in 1939. On that occasion Harvard gave him an honorary Art.D., and he was made Dean Emeritus by M.I.T.

Bill Emerson himself was more important than any particular thing he did. He was President of the American Association for the United Nations, and of the Association of Collegiate Schools of Architecture, and of the Boston Society of Architects. He was Chairman of the Unitarian Service Committee and of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies. He was a life member of the Corporation of M.I.T. and of the Corporation of Simmons College. The roster of these activities indicates the broad range of his interests and his important positions, the confidence his fellows placed in him.

He was a modest, self-effacing man. No matter what he was doing he always seemed to be exactly the same person—putting his whole soul into whatever he set his hand to as though it were his only interest, so versatile were his talents and so inexhaustible his sympathy and energy. During the long years he was Dean at M.I.T. the young flocked to his house as though it were a shrine. He was known as "Uncle Billy Emerson," and he really was a saint. He was patient and understanding, but steadfastly loyal to his own ideals and standards: a visionary who accomplished very practical things.

Of the Old Guard of architects that were schooled in the atelier of Victor Laloux before the turn of the century, only Howard Greenley and Billy Delano now are left. Indeed, the sun has set forever on that whole world where darling Trilby lived and sung, where all the trees were green and every goose a swan.

Samuel Herbert Fisher

Samuel H. Fisher graduated from Yale in 1889 and from the Yale Law School in 1892. The same year he was admitted to the Connecticut Bar; but he went to Washington for three years before returning to New Haven to practise law. In 1916 he moved his office permanently to New York and became personal counsel for Mrs. Stephen V. Harkness and her son Edward A. Harkness. This proved to be a full-time employment, and a very important one, for the Harkness family controlled an immense fortune and the management of it involved all sorts of problems that required the attention of a wise and sophisticated administrator.

Sam was just that. He had been drafted by Yale University and by the State of Connecticut from time to time to serve in difficult assignments; and in his long residence at New Haven he got to know not only the men who were running the State but also Yale men of all ages everywhere in the country. During the Second World War he became Administrator of the Connecticut War Council and Defense Administrator of the State and his ability in these positions to command the intense loyalty of young men was perfectly extraordinary. He had strong feelings about regulations and public laws, and remarked that "during an emergency only God can make a Regulation that makes sense and is workable." When the pressure of events made regulations essential, he made few and made them stick.

Sam's life comprised myriad responsibilities—some important and some quite otherwise—which he discharged with common sense and competence; but to all of them he brought an enlightened understanding and a wise tolerance that led to a just and proper solution. To the town of Litchfield, where he lived, he was its first citizen, its loving conservator. He had the hearing ear and the seeing eye that the Lord hath made, and men repaired to him for help and counsel in confidence and in trust.

Hughell Edgar Woodall Fosbroke

Hughell E. W. Fosbroke was born in England, the son of a clergyman who, after lay work in the London slums, became a missionary to Indian tribes in North America. Fosbroke prepared at the Shattuck School in Minnesota, and entered Harvard with the Class of 1897; but after two years he went to study at Nashotah House, a seminary at Nashotah, Wisconsin, and took a Bachelor of Divinity degree there in 1901. From that time, he was a teacher all the rest of his life.

He was ordained a priest of the Episcopal Church, and became an instructor in Hebrew at Nashotah. In 1909 he was appointed professor of history and religion of Israel at the Cambridge Theological School; and in 1917 he became Dean of the General Theological Seminary in New York.

This position he filled till he retired about ten years ago. He gave general satisfaction as Dean, and he punctuated his daily round by serving as deputy at ecclesiastical conventions and taking part in the never-ending discussions of conduct and belief that arise in church circles. He was a gentle and moderate person, however—wise rather than bellicose—so that he was able to tread these dangerous precincts without accumulating the ill will ordinarily associated with them.

He was eighty-two years old.

Harold deWolf Fuller

Harold deWolf Fuller graduated from Harvard in 1898 and took his Ph.D. there in 1902. The next two years he spent as a travelling fellow from Harvard in Europe. He went to Germany, France, and England, and finally wound up at Leyden studying Netherland literature. During the year in Holland he acquired a ready command of the spoken language and considerable facility in reading seventeenth-century Dutch.

He came back to America and got a job as instructor in English and comparative literature at Harvard, and he also taught a course in Dutch on the side. He was exceedingly interested in Dutch; and he made and published a metrical translation into English of the early legend of Beatrice, the run-away nun who, forsaken by her faithless lover, returns to her convent and finds that she has never been missed: the Virgin Mary had, in her guise, performed her duties as sacristan to reward her for faithfully praying her daily Ave Marias.

Teaching, however—even the teaching of journalism—was not to Fuller's liking; he craved the practice of it. He became editor of The Nation in 1914; but the war came along, and he fell out with Oswald Villard (like everyone else) and resigned. He edited several other periodicals, including the Weekly Review. He finally became executive director of the Netherland-America Foundation, an organization dedicated to deepening the friendship between the two countries. Here his administrative talents were exceedingly useful. Among other accomplishments, he succeeded in having the bronze statue of the old Dutch Governor erected in Stuyvesant Square; and there he stands, on his wooden leg, to this day.

Like Dean Swift, Fuller died from the top, and his last days were a sad anticlimax; but in his heyday he was a lively, responsible writer and editor and a very valuable citizen.

Alfred Geiffert, Jr.

Alfred Geiffert was born in 1890, and educated in the public schools of New Jersey and through extension courses at Columbia. He became a landscape architect, starting out as assistant to Ferruccio Vitale, a pioneer in the profession. He learned the technique of drafting and sketching at Columbia, but his natural sense of design was developed through experience.

Alfred came to be one of the leading landscape architects of America. Among his notable works were the landscape treatment of the National Gallery in Washington and of Rockefeller Center in New York. He went all around the country consulting about laying out grounds for universities and world fairs, and designing towns so that they would grow properly; and he enjoyed it all very much. In truth, he extracted fun out of almost everything he did, and when he was not working at his job he was amusing himself.

He was an enthusiastic cowboy pool player, and was a reliable denizen of the billiard room of the Club. He was Chairman of the Pool Committee, and devoted himself to organizing tournaments. They were wonderful, and were attended by some who played pool and a far larger company who sat, and talked, and ate roast pig and applesauce, and drank beer. Alfred used to have whole little pigs roasted for these occasions, and (with the generous assistance of the Ethiopians) nothing was ever left over. He would cruise around the room forming foursomes of shrinking violets much too shy to get going themselves; and what between him and the beer, a most surprising collection of introverts had a jolly evening and came back next time for more.

And Alfred had a good time, himself. It amused him no end to see reasonably important persons spending their valuable time in these innocent pursuits, to listen to the ironical advice from the armchair experts and the imperious calls for further refreshment. Ah, he was a nice man, Alfred: God rest his soul.

Alan Gregg

Alan Gregg graduated from Harvard in 1911 and from the Harvard Medical School in 1916. He spent a year with the Harvard Medical Unit attached to the British Army in the First World War, and then he joined the staff of the International Health Board of the Rockefeller Foundation. He became director of the Medical Science Division in 1931, and vice president of the Foundation in 1951. He retired in 1956 and went to live in California where (he said) he had "bought the most beautiful view in the world, with four rooms attached." This was situated on a high bluff overlooking the Pacific.

He spent his whole life working for the physical well-being of mankind everywhere in the world. He was a great medical statesman, and his constructive contribution to the arts of healing is beyond reckoning. He said of himself that he had "produced almost no scientific work—the task has been nearer to that of a midwife for the labors of others." He travelled all over the world to seek ways in which the financial resources of the great Foundation could be put to work best for the service of men. He was constantly concerned to make the immense store of medical knowledge accumulated in the twentieth century available to the profession generally and, then, to persuade doctors to make proper use of it.

His work was buttressed by serene courage and a gallant kind of philosophy. "Nearly everybody wears a crown of thorns," he said. "The trick is to wear it cocked on the side of your head." And again, he remarked: "I have come to have much more respect for what are called good manners as a powerful influence in human affairs." He used to come to the Century early in the morning to work in the library, where he had the place to himself.

The world is a better place because of Alan Gregg. There are miracle drugs that ease pain, and cure ills, and banish worry, and contribute to make life pleasanter; and many of these have been developed, many ancient cesspools of infection have been cleansed, many techniques of treatment have been devised with the fostering aid of the Foundation and under the watchful eye of Alan Gregg.

Thomas Hewes

Thomas Hewes graduated from Yale in 1910 and from Yale Law School in 1912. He was admitted to the Connecticut Bar that year and commenced practice in Hartford, where for the rest of his life he had a law office. In 1914 he was elected to the General Assembly; and subsequently he served on numerous commissions by appointment of the Governor.

In the Roosevelt administration he was, for a time, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; but he shortly resigned because of reported differences with Henry Morgenthau about monetary theory. He then was named special assistant to Secretary of State Cordell Hull, and worked there hard and usefully for two years.

He was an aggressive and thoroughly informed advocate of the causes in which he took particular interest. These included "sound money," conservation, and decentralization of government and industry. Indeed, his battle against big-business had a prophetic quality about it. Already many of the things that Tom predicted about our loss of liberty, as government, business, and labor got bigger and bigger, have come to pass; and more are on the way.

In this age of stereotyped people and stereotyped thinking, Tom Hewes was a man to have as a friend.

Edward Ringwood Hewitt

Edward Hewitt was the son of Abram Hewitt, Mayor of New York in 1887-88. His grandfather was Peter Cooper, the founder of the Cooper Union. He reports about himself that he did not learn to read till he was twelve years old; but before that he had built a steam engine that worked, and had helped his grandfather to entertain distinguished guests, like Alexander Graham Bell and Thomas A. Edison. His inclination toward science began early and lasted to the end.

He got his first job with Sir Hiram Maxim in 1890, working on propeller problems for airplanes. There were no airplanes at that time, but the problems had already begun to appear. In the early 1900's he designed the first V-8 engine, and the first heavy-duty farm tractor. But he was interested in all kinds of things. He experimented in photography and color photography, and took the first color photograph of an eclipse of the sun. His interest in chemistry stemmed from a year he spent studying at the University of Berlin; and after his return to America he always had a large laboratory in his home at Liberty, New York.

He was the holder of dozens of patents for inventions, which varied from strings for musical instruments to a noiseless vacuum cleaner. He had an extensive knowledge of psychological medicine and developed several cures that he tried out on himself—without ill effects.

He was a member of the Century for sixty years and all that time a familiar figure in the club house. He liked very much to talk, and he talked well and without any uncertainty. In a long life he had accumulated a wealth of gossip and information and an impatience with mawkishness that made him amusing, and lively, and well worthwhile listening to. He was deft with his hands, and his last contribution to civilized society was the "Hewitt Book Mend," an ingenious outfit of glue, brushes, elastic bands and molds for the binding and repairing of books. The old man was proud of this—especially the glue—and rightly so, for it has probably given pleasure to more Centurions than anything else he ever did.

He had fun right up to the last. When he was ninety, the reporters came to see him, and he explained what was wrong with the world and what he personally did about it. They took his picture while he was hanging from a horizontal bar in his shirt-sleeves. He was a free spirit, unshackled by timidity or false modesty, and, like da Vinci, he had the capacity of seeing old things with new eyes.

Edward Hicks Hume

Edward H. Hume was born in India, where his father was a missionary. He graduated from Yale in 1897 and took the M.D. at Johns Hopkins in 1901 in the great days of Osler, Welch, Halstead, and Kelly. In 1903 he worked for the United States Public Health Service in Bombay, where he did research on the bubonic plague; but after two years he moved to China, where he joined the medical staff of the Yale Hospital and was associated with Yale-in-China at Changsha.

He never thereafter got free from China. Sometimes for long periods he was in America working on committees and councils connected with medical aid for China, and sometimes he was in China teaching and founding medical schools and organizing hospitals. He was the first one to see clearly that the Chinese must run all these institutions themselves, and one of his important and lasting contributions to the situation was the selection of competent Chinese to take over the top administrative positions.

He didn't start out to be a "missionary"; but he certainly was a man with a mission. He was the incarnation of the mind and spirit that are part of the whole concept of medical service on behalf of others. He was one of that small dedicated band that have changed the face of the world while they changed the lives of those to whom they ministered.

Sectarian beliefs interested him not at all. He devoted himself to pharmacology and preventive medicine, and he brought to these subjects a high order of administrative capacity not usually found in doctors. In his training of Chinese he put into effect a policy of partnership in medical education that was as wise as it was novel.

Now his hospitals have been turned into barracks and his laboratories into machine shops, and missionaries are no longer wanted in China. But what Hume created cannot be destroyed; and some day will come another Builder, who will examine the tumbled quoins, and he in turn will build anew in the deathless tradition of freedom and self-respect.

Stuart Wells Jackson

Stuart Jackson graduated from Yale in 1898. He was much beloved by his classmates in college and afterwards, and he, in turn, was sentimental about Yale. After he graduated, he was a quiet and successful insurance broker in the City for over forty years. Then he retired—being impaired in health—and went to live in Gloucester County, Virginia; and there he completed his real life work—the collecting of books, letters, and memorabilia about Lafayette and Lincoln. There was a reason.

In 1825, during Lafayette's last visit to the United States, the boat on which he was travelling was wrecked in the Ohio River. Hall Neilson, Stuart's grandfather, happened to be passing in a vessel which he owned, and he rescued Lafayette. Their friendship and correspondence continued until the end of Lafayette's life. So Stuart collected 400 precious papers and books covering Lafayette's life, and, not long ago, gave them to Yale University Library.

As to Lincoln: Stuart's mother went from Virginia to Philadelphia just before the Civil War. Her brother, in the Confederate Army, was captured and placed in a Union Hospital. She set about to find him, got to Lincoln, told her story, said she was for the South. Lincoln gave her a pass; and she found her brother. So Stuart collected 2,000 papers about Lincoln and gave them also to Yale.

From his farm in Gloucester, Stuart used to send daffodils for the long table at the Century. Virginia is far away from the insurance district in William Street, and with the passage of time the urge to come to the City diminishes, old friends pass away, old interests dim. In these latter days we did not see Stuart at the Club; but his yellow daffodils we saw, and remembered him, and wished him well.

William Langdon Kihn

W. Langdon Kihn was born in Brooklyn, and educated by private teachers and at the Art Students League. He studied under Homer Boss and Winold Reiss. Reiss took him out West on a trip when he was young, and there Bill came in contact with Indians, and began his series of Indian portraits for which he became famous.

He lived among the Acoma Pueblos for some months and later with the Blackfeet, and he came to be much interested and extremely well informed about them. The Blackfeet gave him a tribal name meaning Chase-Enemy-in-Water. He did a dozen Indian portraits for the National Geographic Magazine, that are as good as anybody has ever done, and he illustrated a score of books. His more important paintings are in permanent exhibitions at the Ohio State University, Litchfield Museum, McGill University, Ottawa National Museum, and various other Canadian galleries. He did a lovely portrait of Ruth St. Denis.

Bill had a yarn about a wise old Blackfoot Chief, whom he wanted to pose for him. He said: "The old boy must have been reading the newspapers, for he wouldn't sit until I paid him $10. He told me, 'I know you paint-men. You paint my picture, go back East, and sell it for $10. So me want $10.' Jokingly, I replied, 'G'wan. How do you mean $10.? All I get is $1.—just $1.' At this," said Bill, "the old Chief's eyes lighted up, and reaching into his pocket, he pulled out a dollar bill. 'I'll take one!' he beamed."

Bill lived at Hadlyme in the lower Connecticut valley, and was well known throughout the countryside. He took his responsibilities as a citizen seriously, and put up a fine fight at one time to make sure that the Chester ferry would not injure the beauty of the River and the shore approaches.

He was only 59 when he died. He certainly could paint Indians.

William Lambert Kleitz

William L. Kleitz graduated from Cornell in 1915, and he went to work in Wall Street. In 1919 he joined Guaranty Trust Company and, except for time out going to the First World War, he stayed there all his life. He started with the Guaranty at the bottom—in the bond department—and he finished as president.

Bill always thought of himself as a banker, but to be an important officer of a big bank is to have to attend to myriad jobs and problems that are constantly turning up; and he was continually being drafted to head up charity drives, run the Cornell Alumni, testify before the Senate Banking Committee, and sit on the boards of directors of a score of industrial corporations. He liked the surge and thunder of this existence—quite unlike the Odyssey, to be sure, but with a quick beat that inhibited neurotic introspection.

He had a lovely country place at Port Chester, where the house was full of treasures: china and early American glass. He himself had a serenity and charm that made it very pleasant to go out and visit with him. He always seemed content and free from depression, and his life was apparently regulated so that he had time to talk and laugh over little things.

DeWitt McClellan Lockman

DeWitt Lockman was born in Brooklyn in 1870. He was an artist, a portrait painter, all his life; and his pictures are represented in more than thirty permanent collections, among them the Metropolitan Museum, the National Academy of Design, and Yale University.

He was a pupil of James H. Beard, of Nelson N. Beckford, and of William Sartain. He also studied in Europe for several years. He was not only a painter, but an officer in a myriad of professional undertakings. He was a trustee of the Metropolitan, president of the National Academy of Design, a director of the Municipal Art Society, and a less important member of all kinds of associations of artists and sculptors. He was a reliable person. He did what was expected of him. He was also a really good portrait painter, and, among others, did President Coolidge, General Pershing, Cardinal Hayes, Mr. Root, and President Butler.

The societies and associations that he belonged to, and worked over, were connected with art much more closely and continuously than is the Century. DeWitt was an artist rather than a clubman, and he never became a familiar figure among Centurions. He served on the Admissions Committee for a term; and it was discovered by his co-members that he was blackballing artist-candidates because they were inferior painters, or ultra-moderns, or cubists, or worse. The members remonstrated gently with him about this, and he was good-natured about it and confined the exercise of his veto to less technical grounds.

He was a pleasant, civilized gentleman and gave the impression of being somewhat removed from the general hurly-burly, for he had a detachment in his approach and a courtliness in his manner that are bred in the cloister rather than the market place.

Mark Walton Maclay

Mark Maclay prepared at the Hill School, and graduated from Williams in 1909. He graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1912 and was admitted to the New York Bar the following year.

Mark was born in New York, but he was completely a Yankee in his speech and point of view. He even became a Unitarian. He hated automobiles, and would never buy one (but his wife did). He had a house at Chatham, far out on Cape Cod, and in the summer he used to go there with his family and rejoice that he was in New England.

He was a prominent graduate of Williams and became a trustee; and he was also sometime president of the Gargoyle Alumni Association. When he was in the Law School, he used to take his meals at Lincoln's Inn, and he was wonderfully good looking and debonair, and exceedingly popular. When the First World War came along, Mark had a wife and baby, and he could not go to it. So, by way of public service, he volunteered to work part time as a City fireman. He got very enthusiastic about this, and later became a "fire-buff," that is, a man who keeps rubber boots and a fireman's hat in his closet, and has a fire alarm in the house, and goes to all the worthwhile fires. He had lots of fun doing this and kept it up for many years.

He was a staunch Republican and worked hard in party politics in the City, and he was well and favorably known to the Federal judges and frequently appointed as master, arbitrator, guardian, and receiver in matters before the courts. The long incumbency of the Democrats in Washington, however, precluded his being recognized by political preferment. When the Republicans finally won the Presidency, Mark suggested that he be appointed a Federal judge, but they felt he was then too old. This was a pity, for he would have made an excellent judge, and the Bench in New York sorely needed good lawyers.

Mark really did not accept the Universe. He loathed the New Deal, automobile society, and all the cheap palaver that seems to be inherent in advertising, public relations, and salesmanship. Almost every civilized person hates these things, too, but accepts them as part of the price we seem to have to pay for other things that we want in this life. Nevertheless, Mark never complained about the World. He simply ignored the existence of these mountebanks who roar so loud and thunder in the index.

It is essential to have men about who steadily refuse to conform. They are the despair of Congressional Committees, of Communists, and of tyrants and bullies of every stripe. They stand between the rest of us and those who would try to make us over in their own image, and they save us from the Leviathan. Mark labored in this field, and made his contribution that freedom shall survive; and for men like this we must all be grateful.

Henry Lowell Mason

Henry L. Mason prepared at Exeter, and graduated from Harvard in 1888. He was not only a musician, but was in the business of making pianos; and he eventually became president of the famous Mason and Hamlin Company. He knew a great deal about the way pianos should be built, and wrote several books about the mechanics of organs and pianos.

He lived in Boston, where he was president of the Cecilia Society and also of the People's Choral Union. This latter was an organization making it possible for people at large to practise the singing of masterworks in choruses; and Mason worked hard over this and was instrumental in getting the music published in choral form. He was also interested in being a governor of the Massachusetts Society of Mayflower Descendants.

Henry Mason lived a long time. He was related to nearly half the Back Bay (before the Irish invasion), and he didn't come to New York very often because, like a proper Bostonian, it made him nervous and he felt like a hayseed. When he did come, however, the Club was his refuge and the haven where he would be.

George Wilhelm Merck

George W. Merck prepared at Morristown School, and graduated from Harvard in 1915. He intended to go to Germany and take a Ph.D. in chemistry; but the First World War was going on in Europe, and so he went into the laboratories of his family's business at Rahway, New Jersey. He never did get back to any further study. In 1925 he became president of Merck & Co., the manufacturing chemists.

George worked at this all his life. The firm pioneered in the development of vitamins, sulfas, antibiotics, and hormones; and George brought all the inherited talents and capacity of German ancestors who had labored in these fields at Darmstadt since 1500 to bear on the complex problems of research and synthesization.

Thus he came to make a good deal of money; and withal contributed to the comfort and welfare of mankind quite without measure. As time went on, he continued to be busy, and happy, and very pleasant to associate with. He never seemed to be doing nothing. In Vermont, where he had a farm, he developed a private maple sugar industry; and at Hobe Sound, where he owned an acre, he tried to grow grapefruit on the waterfront. During the Second World War, as head of the Biological Warfare Department, he spent three days a week in Washington, struggling with the amour-propre and heartburnings of the personnel of the armed forces and civilian scientists, three days a week in Rahway, running Merck & Co.; and on Sundays he would lie down at home and look at the ceiling, and think. He seemed to have hidden reserves of strength and patience that made him capable of assuming, and assuming with marked success, one of the most unusual, thankless, and responsible positions in the war.

Institutions of learning gave him honorary degrees; chemistry societies gave him medals; he came to sit in the seats of power; but what George really looked for, and what made him happy was to work long and hard putting together some incredibly complicated drug, and then to launch what he had wrought into the world to function for the relief of pain and the curing of human ills.

Hoyt Miller

Hoyt Miller prepared at St. Paul's, and graduated from Harvard in 1904. He was a chemist. He came from rural New Hampshire stock; and he did not fit very well into the milieu of St. Paul's School which, in that decade, was afflicted with a truly spectacular collection of dead game sports from New York and Philadelphia. Hoyt's father, Charles Ransom Miller, became the editor-in-chief of the New York Times, and the owner of a substantial fraction of the paper; and when his father died, he left Hoyt comfortably endowed.

Hoyt was an able chemist, and a man of imagination. In the days when color photography was little more than a dream, he hit on a process that would work. Other processes began to appear shortly after, and the ultimate developments were worked out by the great manufacturers, into which eventually were merged the contributions of all the chemists and researchers. In Hoyt's later years, believing that color photography had passed from the field of chemistry to that of physics, he devoted his main attention to high-speed photography and electronic flash-light operations.

As the years passed, the stock of the Times brought Hoyt a large income, and he built a house and a laboratory at Great Neck and stayed there most of the time. He was a retiring person and not an easy maker of friends, though his natural goodness and kindness brought him some lifelong intimates—as many as most of us have. His house was a centre for hospitality, and he had an indoor tennis court and a swimming pool that made entertainment easy and pleasant. He was a bachelor, and his great interest was always chemistry. Some superficial oddities probably operated to keep him out of the main stream of social contacts, and incidentally enabled him to develop his very considerable talents to the utmost.

Seth Minot Milliken

Seth Milliken was born in New Hampshire. He graduated from Yale in 1898, and from Columbia P. & S. in 1902, and then entered Roosevelt Hospital as a surgical intern. This early connection was the source of great interest in and loyalty to Roosevelt Hospital, and during the First World War he volunteered his services as attending surgeon there.

Seth could not go to the war himself because, when he was nine years old, he was crippled by poliomyelitis. He took this ever-present handicap with the utmost fortitude, and, if ever a man lived it down, he did. Nevertheless, there were things he could not do.

Seth inherited a considerable fortune, and this enabled him to do what particularly interested him and to omit some of the drudgery. He loved the practice of surgery, and he was good at it; but he was also extremely useful as a trustee of Roosevelt Hospital, and the New York Academy of Medicine, and a member of the boards of half a dozen charitable organizations in the Lenox Hill neighborhood. He was wise, and generous, and a canny manager.

In 1922 he founded the Blue Hill Troupe. He had a summer place at East Blue Hill, and also a large yacht; and a lot of enthusiasts gave a performance of Pinafore on the yacht. With this beginning, the Troupe later transferred to

New York, where they have given Gilbert and Sullivan operas every year—to the immense entertainment of actors and audiences alike. Seth used to sing leading tenor parts in these shows, but after a while he gave up singing, and became chairman of the Troupe.

His yawl, Thistle, was a source of joy to him. He was a sailor from his youth up; and in 1948, when he was Rear Commodore of the New York Yacht Club, he won a thirty-six mile race from Newport to Mattapoisett with her. His boyish delight at this feat was infectious, and everybody was glad.

Toward the end of his life he received a plaque in recognition of outstanding service to the New York Academy of Medicine; and last year he observed his fiftieth wedding anniversary. When one can close the scroll with such events, he must be accounted happy.

John Grant Mitchell

Grant Mitchell prepared at Andover, and graduated from Yale in 1895 and from the Harvard Law School in 1897. After a whirl at reporting, he spent three years practising law. Then the theatre called, and he became a student at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts.

He made his debut as an actor in 1902, in Chicago, in Julius Caesar starring Richard Mansfield; and later in the same year the play came to the Herald Square Theatre. He never wanted for rôles after this, and he appeared with Clara Bloodgood, and with Maxine Elliot, and counted it a "great experience to have known Lillian Russell." His high forehead and disarmingly bland face usually got him cast in parts as vague, well-meaning little men of some kind; but occasionally he submerged his comic talent and played disarmingly bland little fiends.

Grant was a good actor, and he had a wonderful time at it. When the talking motion pictures came along, he left Broadway for Hollywood, where he was deeply engrossed for fifteen years: busy, happy, and making a living. He lived and he died a bachelor; and undoubtedly that is the way he would have had it—although with most of us it is kind of an accident, the result of not paying attention.

George Wagner Morgan

George Morgan graduated from the University of Minnesota in 1905, and from the Harvard Law School in 1908. In that year he was admitted to the Minnesota Bar, and he practised law in St. Paul all his life. St. Paul is not a very large city, but, in the first half of the century, it produced a singularly large number of distinguished lawyers, including Cushman Davis, Frank Kellogg, Pierce Butler, William Mitchell, and Franklin Cutcheon.

In 1908, George Morgan went to work for the firm of Davis, Kellogg, and Severance. After a time, both Davis and Kellogg became United States Senators; then Davis was Governor, and Kellogg was Secretary of State (where he was affectionately known as "Nervous Nelly"). This left George with a good deal to do, and he did it very well; and he also found time to fight for the League of Nations, and pretty much to replan the layout of St. Paul, both physically and in its administration.

He was a roan horse for work, and not a bit afraid of vested interests or of occasionally being wrong. He had a big mouth, and a bald head, and nobody stayed cross with him for long. He did more for St. Paul than any citizen of his generation.

Augustus Henry Mosle

Henry Mosle graduated from Yale in 1889, and from the Harvard Law School in 1892. He was admitted to the New York Bar in 1893, and practised law in the City all his life—as a partner in the firm, Curtis, Mallet-Prevost, & Colt.

In college he was active in athletics, particularly in rowing, a sport in which his interest never flagged. He was one of the early settlers of Black Point; and he always went to the boat races at New London, with all the other denizens of Black Point, in the happy days when the New Haven railroad used to run flatcars with grandstands on them along the river bank—and undergraduates conducted themselves very reprehensibly.

Harry was a quiet, self-contained man, and no disturber of the peace. He spoke little; but when he did, he made a great deal of sense. He was moderate in his views and temperate in expressing them, and he hated brawls.

His main avocation centered in and around charitable enterprises, and for many years he was President of the Lenox Hill Hospital. He died in his ninetieth year, but in appearance he seemed twenty years younger. At the time of his death the combined ages of the two senior members of his firm (Colt and Mosle) were 185 years.

Vernon Munroe

Vernon Munroe prepared at Exeter, and graduated from Harvard in 1896. He went to live at Englewood when he was young, and was twice elected Mayor. In those early days, Dwight Morrow, and various other men destined to become distinguished, also lived at Englewood; and Vernon got to know them and—more important—they came to know him and what manner of man he was.

In 1920 he came to work for J. P. Morgan & Co. as Secretary of the South American Bankers Group, which the House of Morgan was struggling with at that time; and when that job was done, he continued there as (he said) “handy man and trouble shooter.” Indeed, he worked there all the rest of his life in close and happy association with Morrow and Davison and Lamont. They were wise to keep him foot-free; and he was thrown into one difficult situation after another, emerging sometimes with his head bloody but always unbowed. Of this long adventure he later wrote: “In fifty years of business life, and in several employments, it was only when with this firm that I could find nothing to criticize, nothing of which to disapprove, nothing to regret, either as to motive or as to method.”

He admired the men he was working with and for, and had complete confidence in their integrity; and they, in turn, were fully aware of his loyalty and competence.

Exeter, however, was his primary interest. He was Clerk to the Board of Trustees from 1935 to 1946, in which year Lewis Perry, T. W. Lamont, and Vernon all resigned and turned the School over to a new dispensation. Exeter is one of the great schools of the English-speaking world, and whenever he went up there, Vernon said, he had an uplifting of the heart. His association with Exeter was marked by the same willingness to do the most troublesome things without the slightest demand for particular recognition that characterized his work in the banking house; and when his efforts contributed to the lustre of Exeter he was content.

Like many Yankees, he was reluctant to talk at unnecessary length, and he hated to waste time. In the middle of the political campaign of 1952 he met a friend on Park Avenue who stopped him, and said: "Good Heavens, did you see that Ike let McCarthy get on the train with him?"

"Nothing bothers me," replied Vernon. "I make up my mind at once whom I am going to vote for; and then I keep steadfast by reading only what the other candidate says."

Another time, a fellow Harvard graduate was complaining bitterly that Harvard was going to Michigan to play a football game. "They have even asked me to give them money to send the Harvard Band out there—and I am such a goof that I gave them some," he concluded.

"Ah, yes," said Vernon, "I was solicited, too. But I stipulated that my extremely modest contribution be used only to send them out there, and no part whatever was to be expended to bring them back."

George Hewitt Myers

George H. Myers prepared at The Hill School, and graduated from Yale in 1898. He was interested in forestry, and took the M.F. degree at Yale in 1902. He helped establish the Yale Forest at Union, Connecticut, and gave a large tract of land for it. For a time he taught in the Yale Forestry School.

The other thing George was interested in was textiles—not the investments, the expression of art in textiles. He lived in Washington, and he there established the Textile Museum of the District of Columbia, of which he was a trustee for many years. This remarkable institution contains an amazing variety of rugs, tapestries, and linens, some dating from 300 B.C. To the uninitiated a little of this goes a long way.

George was concerned (and annoyed) that when the ordinary rustic thinks of Art, he has paintings in mind; whereas that medium is a fairly recent one, having been developed in the fifteenth century, and there is a rich store of art history for many centuries prior to that. Being willing to ameliorate this delusion, George proposed to Charles Sawyer, the Director of the Addison Gallery at Andover, that if he would assemble a group of art teachers in the independent schools, he, Myers, would give them a banquet. Accordingly, Sawyer collected the art teachers, and Frederick Keppel provided a meeting place in the Board Room of the Carnegie Corporation, and in the evening George gave a banquet of surpassing splendor at the Century Club; and this continued during Christmas holidays for many years. Naturally, George indoctrinated the art teachers with a proper awareness of art other than painting, (with particular reference to textiles), and they duly became sensitive to past cultures as represented by the arts in the broadest sense. And undoubtedly the instruction trickled down into the schools and spread a livelier interest and understanding among the youth—and among some of the aged, also.

For George Myers was right. It is written on the facade of the American Academy:

*Hold high the flaming torch from age to age:
All arts are one, all branches of one tree.*

Frank Courtney Nicodemus, Jr.

Courtney Nicodemus was born in Baltimore, and graduated from the University of Maryland Law School in 1901. He was admitted in that year to the Baltimore Bar; but in 1905 he came to New York and went to work in the law offices of Pierce and Greer, who were expert railroad lawyers. Thus he came to be a railroad lawyer himself. This field is a somewhat technical specialty, and Courtney became exceedingly competent at it.

In 1909 he became involved with the foreclosure of the Western Maryland, and the next year with the sale of the International Great Northern. In 1915 he was one of the reorganizers of the Wabash, and acted as receiver for this railroad under a court appointment from 1931 to 1941. He was also instrumental in creating the Railway Express Agency and starting it on its way. In all these, and in various similar employments, he discharged his duties with distinction and to the satisfaction of courts, clients, and fellow workers.

In his salad days in Baltimore, Courtney was a generous and gentle soul, and he continued in this temper all his life. He had a buoyant spirit, and a wonderful capacity to see the bright side. His early years in New York were marred by not having quite enough income for the needs of his growing family; but he solved the situation by moving out to Smithtown as his all-the-year-around home; and after a while, of course, his income picked up. During this time, 1922-29, he was at the Century evening after evening, and it was a lifesaver for him. It was also a joy to his fellow members, for he was always cheerful, and amusing, and friendly. In the summer at Smithtown he used to get up early, and pick corn, and bring a great basket of it to the Club. He had an arrangement with the porter on the club car of the railroad whereby the corn was rushed up to the Century as soon as the train got in.

Courtney's wife was ill and somewhat difficult for a long time before she died, and his never-failing care and consideration for her were characteristic of the kind and loyal man he was.

William Albert Nitze

William A. Nitze graduated from Johns Hopkins in 1894, and he took his Ph.D. there in 1899. He was a scholar in Medieval French Literature, and for many years was professor and head of the Department of Romance Languages at the University of Chicago. In 1932 he went to Princeton. From 1942 to 1946, when he retired, he was professor of French at the University of California (Los Angeles).

Nitze's particular interest was the Arthurian Legends. He wrote books—Glastonbury and the Holy Grail, Lancelot and Guinevere, Arthurian Romance and Modern Poetry—dealing with Merlin and the Round Table, and with the literature of the subject, and he obviously was a wise man that had studied it with understanding.

Perhaps, if one is to live in Los Angeles (where there are no angels, but mostly professional football players and Hollywood divas) it is important to hitch one's wagon to a star and maintain magic casements opening on the foam of perilous seas in faery lands forlorn. Anyway, that is what Nitze did; and thus he was able to spend most of his time at Camelot and watch Sir Lancelot mow down the visiting champions in the tournaments.

*The shattering trumpet shrilleth high,
The hard brands shiver on the steel,
The splinter'd spear-shafts crack and fly,
The horse and rider reel;
They reel, they roll in clanging lists,
And when the tide of combat stands,*

*Perfume and flowers fall in showers,
That lightly rain from ladies' hands.*

Charles Cooper Nott, Jr.

Charles C. Nott graduated from Williams in 1890 and from the Harvard Law School in 1894. His father was Chief Justice of the Court of Claims (by appointment of President Lincoln); and Nott, too, became a judge, serving on the General Sessions Bench from 1914 until he retired in 1940.

Nott was a first-class lawyer, and he made an extraordinary judge. General Sessions is the chief criminal court of the City, and he tried criminals there without fear or favor. In 1929 the prosecution failed to prove a case against McManus for the murder of the gambler, Arnold Rothstein, and Judge Nott directed the jury to bring in a verdict of acquittal—a matter of astonishment to the lay public.

He also presided at the second trial of James J. Hines in 1939, when the Tammany leader was convicted for protecting the policy racket of Dutch Schultz. His crisp and impersonal conduct of the trial excited great admiration, and was a model of judicial competence. In trials he never gave evidence of impatience or indignation, but seemed to eliminate his emotions completely from the courtroom—a consummation devoutly to be wished.

Judge Nott lived a long time—longer than most of his friends, which is not an unmixed blessing. But he never outlived men's memories of his quiet courage and a lifetime of service to the City where he spent his days.

Frederick Law Olmsted

Frederick L. Olmsted prepared at Roxbury Latin School, and graduated from Harvard, magna cum laude, in 1894.

His father was a famous landscape architect (he laid out Central Park); and Frederick followed in his footsteps, and became even better known. His office and his house were both in Brookline, and he lived there all his active life.

In 1898 he was appointed landscape architect for the Metropolitan Park System of Boston, a post he retained till 1920; and a few years later—originally by appointment of President Theodore Roosevelt—he became involved with plans for the extension and elaboration of the original City of Washington laid out in 1790 by Major L'Enfant. He was on one commission after another in this connection, so that he has been characterized as "the longest continuing influence of any single individual on the growth of the Capital."

He was one of the incorporators of the American Academy in Rome, and a member of its Council until 1949. He was persuaded by President Eliot to develop at Harvard the curriculum for the first course of study in landscape architecture offered at any American university; and for 15 years he taught a good deal of it himself.

He was an intense, nervous man with a restless spirit that drove him hard; but he was full of talent and always aware of the limits of the possibility of things. He was wonderfully inspiring to work with, but one needed some patience and perseverance. He was not a good speaker, and he knew it; but as a critic peering over the drafting boards he was marvellously quick to visualize a design and grasp the significance of the topographical features. He had an uncanny power of concentration, arrived at conclusions rapidly, expressed them laconically. He harbored within his frame the virtues and some of the limitations of the best Bostonians:

the impatience with verbiage, irrelevancy, and delay; the skeptical approach to bruited discoveries of new truths; a stealthy pleasure in living frugally.

Henry Stuart Patterson

Henry S. Patterson graduated from Williams in 1896, and from Columbia P. & S. in 1900. He was a cardiologist and general practitioner in the City for fifty years. A good part of this time he was medical director of St. Luke's Hospital, and he always made his headquarters there. After his retirement in 1949, he was retained as a consultant to some twenty hospitals in the metropolitan area. He had the instinct of the born clinician; but his intuitive appraisal of the sufferer's affliction was founded on an immense store of knowledge and experience, so that his colleagues were continually impressed by the wisdom of his diagnoses.

He used to go to Canada to fish in trout streams; and he was not only an expert angler, but was no less skillful in the cognate arts, such as tying flies and the difficult craft of rod-making. Perhaps it was trekking around in the north woods that turned his inclinations to painting. Every little while he would give an exhibition of water colors. His woodland scenes were first class, and regarded with no small astonishment and admiration by his fellow amateurs at the Century.

He was one of the original members of the Blue Hill Troupe, and in the 20's sang the leading tenor part in several of their Gilbert and Sullivan productions. In truth, his quiver was full of arrows: he was endowed with talents beyond those of ordinary men, and with strength to live life to the full.

Nevertheless, all in all, the important thing about him was that he loved his fellow man and worked for him with an understanding heart.

James Albert Paul

James A. Paul graduated from Columbia in 1932 (Phi Beta Kappa), and, after going through Seabury-Western Seminary, he took a year at Oxford in 1934–35. It is rather mysterious how he managed all this, for he had no money and had been brought up on the lower East Side.

When he got home, he was ordained and appointed Assistant Rector of St. James' Church on Madison Avenue. The Rector was Dr. (afterwards Bishop) Donegan, and the two men made a remarkable team—Dr. Donegan being a complicated personality, and Jim Paul being a very simple, friendly soul. For about a year, while Donegan was incapacitated with nerve difficulties, Jim ran the large parish alone.

In 1940 he was appointed Vicar of the Church of the Holy Trinity, which was a mission of St. James'. Parishioners of St. James who were fond of him kept moving over to be with him, and people began to come who knew him in Rumson, where he was summer Rector. Pretty soon the mission showed a brand new financial strength, and was ready to become an independent parish. It is now one of the strongest and most important Churches in the City.

Jim's forte was his friendliness. He was serene and kind, and when anybody was in difficulties nothing was too much trouble for Jim. He seemed to be part of New York, and the City was in his bones. He used continually to get invitations to go away to be Dean of some cathedral or Rector of some fashionable church in the suburbs, but he never would go. The crowded, dishevelled streets were the rightful sphere of his influence. He understood the people, and they had complete confidence in him.

He was a friend to man, and those who loved him are beyond all counting.

Albert Sheldon Pennoyer

Sheldon Pennoyer prepared at Lawrenceville (New Jersey) and went to the University of California; but he left there without completing the course to study architecture at the Beaux-Arts. His real interest, however, turned out to be painting rather than architecture; and after a while he switched over to Julien's Academy in Paris, and later went to the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. In the First World War he served as a sergeant in the Camouflage Corps.

Sheldon was a first-class painter. He was a bachelor, and lived alone, and this gave him the leisure to work hard at painting; and he became famous both for portraits and for landscapes. He was quite mad about locomotives, and his pictures of railroad scenes, narrow-gauge roads, and the old wood-burners are wonderful. His trains move and throb as they sputter through the charming scenes of the pre-Casey Jones era, and one stops to look as though a real engine were careening across the white snow fields. He wrote a book, Locomotives in Our Lives, in which he remarked dryly that the Currier & Ives prints were full of mistakes.

He was a very amusing companion, and at the Club a great deal. He was of slight stature, rather hesitant in manner, and shy people were encouraged to talk with him. He was killed in his seventieth year in an automobile accident in Spain, where he was painting ancient castles for a book he was writing.

To be a good painter and to paint castles in Spain is surely a happy dispensation.

Thomas Robins

Thomas Robins went to Princeton for two years, 1887-89, but then he left to join a rubber company in New York. He got to know a great deal about rubber in this employment. In those pre-automobile days rubber was used mostly for overshoes and raincoats.

In 1891 he visited the Ogden iron mine in northern New Jersey, where Thomas A. Edison was trying out a magnetic method of processing low-grade ore. Edison had a primitive belt conveyor carrying ore from the mine to the plant; but the belt could not take the wear, and the maintenance cost was high. Edison was using rubber as a glue to stick layers of canvas together.

Tom told his employer about the belt, and said it ought to be made with the rubber as the wearing surface; but his employer thought the idea was "too revolutionary" and wouldn't try it. So Tom resigned and produced a belt for Edison himself with the backing of a competitor. It was an instant success; and, as it was improved from time to time, it certainly did revolutionize the conveying of heavy, bulky substances for short distances—although one is now being designed to carry ore and coal 103 miles.

This pleasant story is about one of the pleasantest men that ever graced the Long Table. He lived to be nearly ninety, working at his escalators and conveyors, and contributing new ideas almost to the last. Among other things, he wanted to take the trains out of the shuttle between Grand Central and Times Square, and put in a moving belt.

He was so taken with the bronze of Balaam and his Ass, shown at one of the Artist Members' Exhibitions, that he bought it for the Club (it was done by John Angel), and it stands on the Round Table in the East Room to this day, to the joy of all beholders. Tom used to sit and look at Balaam, and talk, and tell stories. He was a small, quiet man with a kindly face, and a little deaf. He served the Century on the Board of Management, the House Committee, and the Admissions Committee. He never seemed to raise his voice, but he was exceedingly influential; and he was right so much of the time that he came to be accepted as practically omniscient.

When he got old, he went out to his house at Saybrook, and watched the great river flow past into Long Island Sound like some giant conveyor belt that was, and is, and shall be for a long, long time.

Harry Stanley Rogers

Harry S. Rogers was born in Detroit, and graduated from the University of Wyoming in 1914. He was a civil engineer, but he grew more interested in teaching than in practising the profession, and very soon became, in turn, an instructor in engineering at the Universities of Iowa, Wyoming, and Washington, and Lafayette and Oregon State Colleges.

In 1933 he was appointed President of Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn. Polytechnic at that time had some 2,000 students, but in his twenty-four years of service it grew to have 6,000. The situation of the Institute was a challenge to Rogers. It was an old established institution, but rather local, and he developed it into one of national importance and standing. He attracted first-class men to the faculty, and supplied them with research opportunities and graduate students. One philosopher publicly remarked that he brought two things to Brooklyn: "some hard boiled convictions on educational policy and a flair for management."

He was refreshingly iconoclastic about the liberal arts. Most engineers, not having heard of the liberal arts, are somewhat at a loss to understand about them—but not Rogers. He was provoked that the liberal arts were supposed to "educate men for life," while the engineering curriculum only trained men to earn a living, producing "specialists who were trained but not civilized."

"All the college—any college," he said, "can hope to do toward the development of the well-rounded man, is to inspire, stimulate, and encourage the interests of the students so that after graduating they will continue through their lives the intellectual growth begun in college."

It was time someone said this. The futile efforts of colleges to make educated men out of illiterates forced into their gates by the perversions of democracy are worthy of a better cause; and to be a civil engineer is a better prospect than to be a salesman, even if one cannot be a poet.

Harry Rogers was brought up in the West, and when he got to Brooklyn he fairly rejuvenated the place. His voice opened the Door to which they had no Key, and raised the Veil past which they could not see; and everyone began to think.

In the cool of the day he walked to and fro in Brooklyn, and saw that it was good.

George Rublee

George Rublee prepared at Groton, and graduated, magna cum laude, from Harvard in 1890, and from the Harvard Law School in 1895. He was the first graduate of Groton—the only boy in his form—and this chance had a deep and lasting effect on him and his relations with others. He was not only the first graduate of Groton in time, but all his life he was the pride and beau ideal of the School—a position that he occupied with humorous fortitude, but was quite helpless to ameliorate. He went back to the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Groton in 1934, and sitting beside the Rector was a somewhat younger graduate, Franklin D. Roosevelt. The President of the United States insisted on rising and yielding the place of honor to the senior graduate.

In 1912, he spent part of the winter teaching at Groton, and persuaded the Rector to vote for T.R. on the Bull Moose ticket. This was a truly astonishing accomplishment. In 1914, he opposed the re-election in New Hampshire of Jacob H. Gallinger, Republican leader of the Senate. In the following year, Rublee was appointed by President Wilson to the Federal Trade Commission; but Senator Gallinger successfully fought confirmation on the ground that Rublee was “personally obnoxious.” Thus the Senator acquired a similar immortality to that of the man who burnt the Temple of Diana at Ephesus.

President Wilson continued to appoint Rublee to various important boards during the First World War, and he served on them most acceptably. After the War, he likewise held high government posts under Presidents Coolidge and Hoover; and in the administration of President Roosevelt he was director of Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, negotiating with Nazi Germany for permission for the German Jews to emigrate, a project that was interrupted by the Second World War.

George was a very tall, lean man with a long, sad face, and lank, thin hair that he parted in the middle. The secret of his influence on those he came in contact with is not explicable. He seemed to have a maturity, a confident certainty, that gained acceptance of his ideas even among men quite as capable as he was himself. He had very distinguished abilities, but he had his way more by the impress of his personality than by the force of his reasoning.

He was entirely without rancor, though seldom converted to any point of view with which he had first disagreed. He had a really noble spirit—like John Hampden, not like the rest of us—and it is unthinkable that in his whole life he ever did anything mean, sordid, vulgar, or not generous.

Henry Dwight Sedgwick

Henry Dwight Sedgwick prepared at Adams Academy in Quincy, and graduated from Harvard in 1882. Then he went to the Law School for a year. He practised law in New York from 1885 to 1898 in the law offices of Evarts, Choate and Beaman; but he was not really interested in it, and, after a few years, he forsook the law and took to writing—largely history and biography. He wrote some good books, for the most part about Italy and the people who lived in the thirteenth century. He travelled much in the realms of gold, and many goodly states and kingdoms saw; and he came to know

Western Europe, its stage and its literature, like the palm of his hand. No campanile in Italy nor tower in France but he had climbed it.

What he was and his conduct of life were perhaps more important in the world than the writings he left. It is a misfortune that words are inadequate to carry over to those who did not know him the symbol of whatever was delightful in a companion and precious as a friend. He had sufficient financial security so that he could follow his bent, and his success in this regard is attested by his election to the Academy of Arts and Letters and his being a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He was not only completely charming: he was a source of solace and restoration to his friends. Even in his old age he seemed possessed by the spirit of eternal youth that carried him into fields of speculation quite removed from the pessimism and frustrations of the rialto.

He belonged to the clan of Sedgwicks that is associated with Stockbridge, and he lived there, himself, in Sedgwick House. In his Fiftieth Class Report, he wrote:

"I have led a quiet, dilettante life, sunshine and shadow. I regard myself as a Grub Street hack, and if there is enough butter on my bread, I motor in France in the spring and pass my summers with my eldest son in Murray Bay. I go down the vale of years quietly, rather skeptical of human values, especially those of the active life.

"Majoresque cadunt altis de montibus umbrae."

Kenneth Monroe Spence

Kenneth M. Spence graduated from Columbia College in 1906, and from the Columbia Law School in 1909. He went into the United States Attorney's Office when Colonel Stimson was at the head of it, and there he learned to try cases and became known as a good trial lawyer. After a few years he started a firm of his own with Henry Hotchkiss, and they practised law together in the City all the rest of Kenneth's life.

He was somewhat nomadic about his law firms, and kept taking partners in, and letting them go again, and changing the firm name with kaleidoscopic versatility. This was because he and Hotchkiss were a hard core of competence and not very easy going.

He was involved in the work of the City Bar Association, and served on many of its Committees; and here, of course, he came to know lawyers from schools other than Columbia. He was appointed Special Assistant Attorney-General in 1920 to investigate Nassau County graft; and for six years he was the Mayor of Lawrence, Long Island. Older lawyers, like Colonel Stimson and Austin Fox, used to get him to help them on important matters, and he was exceedingly useful at this kind of thing. He wrote the brief for a large group of lawyers opposing the appointment of Louis Brandeis to the Supreme Court, and it was a most remarkable document.

In 1928 he was one of the founders of the Voluntary Committee of Lawyers, which did as much as anybody in the country to repeal the 18th Amendment. Even at that early time his hair was white, and this made him look older and perhaps more formidable than he really was.

About twenty years ago he moved into the City from Long Island, and after a while became a Vestryman of the Church of the Epiphany. He was a very pleasant, friendly person, not in the least pedantic. He knew all his coevals who were doing anything important in New York, and they all knew him and liked him. He was inextricably identified with the life and politics of the town, and he was an active, useful citizen on the side of the angels.

Theodore Edwin Steinway

Theodore Steinway's grandfather came to America in 1853 and set up as a manufacturer of pianos. The business became very important and the pianos were almost immediately recognized as the best made anywhere.

Theodore was born in New York in 1883, and he went to work for the family firm when he was eighteen years old. Long afterward, he would remark that he could still put a piano together blindfolded (a piano has 12,000 parts). After a while he got to be president of the company.

He had great and justifiable pride in Steinway pianos, and all his life he kept them at the head of the line. During the depression he shut down production for two years rather than make a cheap piano.

Besides pianos he had a consuming interest in stamp collecting. He became one of the foremost collectors in America; and in 1952 he received the Lichtenstein award as an outstanding philatelist, and his name was added to the roll of distinction of the Philatelic Congress of Great Britain, the only one ever signed by King George V. He discovered (and announced) that the Century had contributed more to philately than any other organization: one of our members designed over 200 stamps for China. Eight Presidents now honored by stamps were Centurions, and many notable creations of members of the Club, such as the Panama Canal and the Lincoln Memorial, were likewise commemorated with stamps.

Theodore had lots of fun as he went along. He was a first-class actor, and belonged to the Comedy Club, where he played low comedy rôles and character parts in a never-to-be-forgotten way. He acted in Wilder's play given at the Club in 1947 (the Centennial) and was extremely amusing. He usually turned up on Saturday at lunch, and drank some drinks, and made whimsical remarks, and was the best company imaginable.

Alas, Heraclitus, when they told me, I was sad.

Philip Battell Stewart

Philip B. Stewart was born in Vermont in 1865. His father was Governor, and United States Congressman and Senator—needless to say, a Republican. Philip prepared at Andover, and graduated from Yale in 1886. In his Senior Year he was captain of the nine, on which Amos Alonzo Stagg was the pitcher.

In 1899 he moved to Colorado Springs, and there he lived the rest of his life. He engaged in mining and public utility enterprises for many years, and finally got into banking; but his main interest and occupation was Republican politics. He was prominently identified with the Progressive movement in the Rocky Mountain region, and in 1914 was elected Speaker of the Colorado House of Representatives. He was a close personal friend of Theodore Roosevelt's, and T.R. used to go hunting with him in Colorado.

Stewart was a solid citizen of the West, simple and genuine. He harbored no inhibitions, for problems involving questionable courses of conduct did not present themselves to his mind. He was opposed to vice and crime, and regarded people who became confused between right and wrong as sophistics.

And, of course, they may be. There is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so.

Francis Henry Taylor

Francis Taylor prepared at Kent, and graduated from University of Pennsylvania in 1924. He then went abroad to study art: at the Universities of Paris and Florence, and at the Institut d'Estudis Catalans in Barcelona. Then he spent a year in the Princeton Graduate School, and went to work as assistant curator of the Philadelphia Art Museum.

One does not become a museum director right away. One gets to be a marked man when those in control finally become aware that something is going on somewhere in the museum. It was in 1931 that Francis moved to Worcester to be director of the Worcester Art Museum. What the good people of Worcester wanted was a bright young man with ideas appropriate to the city's new $750,000 museum; and they got just that. He made spectacular purchases, opened free art classes, gave Sunday concerts, and campaigned all over the countryside to attract the populace. His museum became—and remained—the best of its size in the nation. What P. T. Barnum was to the Greatest-Show-on-Earth, Francis Taylor was to the museum—any museum—he was connected with. He had the vision, the imagination, and the furious drive that made the world beat a path to his door. A museum, he said, should be a university free of entrance requirements; he devoted himself to enlarging the understanding of all New England.

All this violent ferment in the north being observed in New York, Francis was summoned to be director of the Metropolitan, the greatest art museum in the Americas; and here he worked for fifteen long years. It was not so much fun as Worcester, because he got a lot of advice, but it was fearfully exciting—like riding a seventeen-hand horse. He went about renovating and enlarging the buildings, putting in lovely pools and excellent restaurants, getting exhibitions from abroad: French tapestries, old masters from Berlin, or loan exhibitions from Madrid. The dignified Metropolitan began to gather an alarming headway. People got into a passion over art. The modernists, who had looked on the Metropolitan as a morgue of dead horrors, now wanted to have an exhibition there themselves. The conservatives would not hear of such a desecration. The trustees were hesitant and divided. Francis was in hot water a good part of the time; but he did not mind that, for the count of annual visitors was now running at 2,300,000, the membership list had trebled, the endowment had doubled, and the Metropolitan had become the liveliest and most exciting museum in the world. But he began to get tired. The everlasting hurly-burly took all his time, and left him no opportunity for study and not much energy for creative ideas. Showmanship is important, but it must be founded on scholarship if it is to be constructive.

Who, except Francis Taylor, would have given up the directorship of the great Metropolitan to go back to the modest museum in Worcester? To take this step—which almost nobody would understand—so that he might again be a scholar? The answer is: "Nobody but Francis Taylor." He turned away from the heavy burden of administration in New York for the promise of opportunity to write and study in a calm and quiet place.

Francis was only less remarkable outside than inside. He was a big man and must have weighed 240 pounds. He had snapping black eyes and a hawk nose, so that he reminded one of an aristocratic Arab. He spoke simply and rapidly and immediately to the point; and, though he was always polite, he didn't give much quarter to preciosity or arty dilettantes. He was only 54 years old when he died.

Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life; but he found the gate, and the way, and the good life.

Charles Hadley Watkins

Charles H. Watkins prepared at Newton High School, and graduated from Harvard in 1909. In 1949 Harvard gave him an honorary A.M.

Charley got early into the insurance business, through his father-in-law, and he earned a living at this all his life. He was Boston agent and chairman of the Excelsior Insurance Company of Syracuse; but of late years he stuck close to his office in Boston, where he had other interests.

He was treasurer of the Lantern League of the Old North Church, which raised funds to rebuild the steeple that was blown down by Hurricane Carol. In this connection he met President Eisenhower, who a little later appointed him chairman of the National Historic Sites Commission. He was also secretary of the Society for the Preservation of Covered Bridges, and a member of several other associations that aimed to preserve New England antiquities.

He had a good time doing these things. He was a civilized and sophisticated person, and wise about what to do and what not to do. He gradually became deaf; and this tended—as it almost always does—to take him out of easy social contacts and set his feet in a large room. It's hard work to be deaf, but one doesn't waste much time.

Charles-Edward Amory Winslow

Charles-Edward Winslow was born in Boston and graduated from M.I.T. in 1898. He was on the M.I.T. faculty from 1902 to 1910, and at City College, New York, from 1910 to 1914 before going to Yale, where he was appointed Professor of Public Health.

Public Health, which means preventive medicine, was the field to which he devoted his whole life. His consuming interest was for ever-advancing human welfare, and with this he combined a respect for the realities of finance, politics, and contemporary public opinion that made him an exceedingly effective leader. He remarked that, within limitations, a community could determine its own death rate and that proper social organization was no less important than the science of biology.

Soon after joining the Yale faculty, Winslow directed a public health survey of New Haven. It furnished a pattern for community surveys that the Yale department has made in scores of cities since then. Winslow clearly understood not only that slums were breeders of disease but "the sense of inferiority due to living in a substandard home is a far more serious menace to the health of our children than all the unsanitary plumbing in the United States."

He was a member of the Century for forty-three years, and all that long time brought lustre to the Club and friendly companionship to the members.

Willis Delano Wood

Willis Wood was born in Brooklyn. In 1894 he spent a year studying at Amherst; but then he left and went into a stock brokerage office. In 1910 Amherst gave him an honorary A.M.

He was a member of the New York Stock Exchange, and he served on its governing board from 1911 to 1927; but perhaps he is best known as a trustee of Vassar, where he made an outstanding record. At some solemn convocation of the College he was sitting on the dais next to the President while the Dean, a dignified lady, was standing in front of them at the lectern delivering an address of considerable complexity. "Elsie," said Wood in a hoarse whisper to the President, "what's the name of this young woman?"

She told him.

"She has very good-looking legs," he said.

That, however, was not his familiar field of expertise; he was a most remarkably useful trustee and worked hard at it.

His father-in-law died and left a gorgeous great place on the bluffs overlooking Oyster Bay; and shortly afterward the stock-market crash of 1929 occurred. The raising of the inheritance taxes preoccupied Wood for some years, and he performed a most difficult job with extraordinary skill and wisdom.

He used to go to Amherst every year at Commencement, and see old friends and renew his youth. He liked young people, and was exceedingly kind and hospitable to a group of them who lived around Cold Spring Harbor. He was a fixture in that part of the world and was regarded with universal affection; and he deserved to be, for he was a gentle, lovable man.

Heathcote Murison Woolsey

Heathcote M. Woolsey prepared at Groton, and graduated from Yale in 1907. When he was at School, he could run very fast, and he developed into a remarkable halfback; but at college he was too small to play varsity football. In his Sixth Form he was Senior Prefect at Groton. The Rector was on a sabbatical that year, and Heathcote pretty much ran the School himself.

From Yale he went to the Columbia School of Architecture for a year, and then to the Beaux-Arts in Paris. In 1912 he came back to New York, and commenced the practice of architecture here; and after a little while he went to live in Rye, where the high school and other public buildings are monuments to his talents. He also built some charming houses.

About ten years ago he retired and moved himself and his family to Kent. Winters he spent at Beaufort, South Carolina, or in the Caribbean. He was an ardent conchologist and had a large and rare collection of shells from all parts of the world. He derived great satisfaction from this hobby and came to know a great deal about shells and marine animals in general.

Heathcote was inextricably connected by inheritance with Yale, and related to half the original settlers of New Haven. He was a simple, modest person, entirely devoid of affectation or mannerisms, and one of the pleasantest companions that Providence has vouchsafed in a turbulent world.

Mahonri Mackintosh Young

Mahonri Young was born in Salt Lake City in 1877, a grandson of Brigham Young and considerably the most distinguished descendant the great Mormon leader has had so far. He started modeling in native adobe; but in 1897 he met the sculptor, Cyrus Dalling, who came to Salt Lake; and after that he came east and enrolled in the Art Students League in New York. Then, after a year, he was off to Paris, where he studied at the Julien, Calarossi, and Delachuse Academies.

He had an amazing facility with pen and pencil and was fully as talented as an etcher and a painter as he was as a sculptor; but it was as a sculptor that he became famous and will go down to posterity. Much of his work was devoted to frontier subjects. He did the bronze monument, Sea Gull, in Salt Lake City erected by the Mormons in memory of the "Miracle of the Gulls" when the birds flew in from the far-away Pacific to devour the swarms of locusts that were destroying Mormon crops. He also did the great sculpture, sixty feet high, that stands at the mouth of Emigration Canyon on the spot where Brigham Young, arms outstretched toward Salt Lake Valley, announced to his followers: "This is the place."

Mahonri regarded himself and his grandfather with kindly humor. "I am descended from a Sultan and Pope," he used to say; but he would not talk very much about the Mormons—except that he obviously admired them. He also took abiding interest in the Art Students League, and remarked that he was himself the only man he knew "to teach everything at the League." Indeed, he taught print-making, painting, sculpture, and illustration on and off from 1916 to 1943.

His last one-man show, a cross section of all his talents, was in 1948 at the Century. It was evident that he had built an enduring record as indestructibly documented on paper as in imperishable bronze. The vigor and vitality of his figures in action—Indians, prize fighters, pioneers—are terrific. For the wine festival at the Club in 1956, he painted a mural of oxen pulling a wain through vineyards with workers loading grapes: a beautiful picture, which the old man did right in the gallery in some four hours.

He was at the Club a great deal—especially in the last decade, after his wife died. Like all old Club members, he was dead set against any change or “improvement,” and sometimes he was rather difficult to satisfy. But he was pleasant and friendly to talk with about less controversial subjects, and his comments were pithy, and relevant, and amusing. His background was different from that of most of us dwellers on the Atlantic Seaboard, and his ideas had a provocative quality that was stimulating and exciting. He brought lustre to the Club when he was in his prime, and in his old age it supported and comforted him.
